■ A little ditty to be sung to the tune of "O Tannenbaum": O Schadenfreude, O Schadenfreude. Look out, poor Scooter Libby. In this morass, your ass is grass. You told a big fat fibby.

Andrew Frank

Chicago

■ I congratulate Scooter Libby. He stepped out from Cheney's shadow into a highly lucrative spotlight, just like Gordon Liddy and Ollie North, true American entrepreneurs, who tapped into a winning formula: A big betrayal plus a little time equals a whole lot of moola-la. Who cares if tens of thousands of brown people die? Count the number of dead at three-fifths of a person, and it's not that big a deal. The big number is the paycheck at the end of the indictment. Eyes on the prize, Libby, eyes on the prize.

Greg Alan Morelli

■ Time for the chicken hawks to come home to noose.

■ We rural folk see a familiar problem—and solution. Liars and thieves in and around the Bush Administration are multiplying like feral (fat) cats. Unfortunately, we don't have enough sacks and rocks, or a deep enough pond. At least Nixon did the honorable thing.

Doug Troutman

■ OK, so virtually the entire leadership of the Republican Party is facing indictment or investigation for crimes that include outing a CIA agent, lying to get us into a war, war profiteering, insider trading, criminal conspiracy, money laundering, campaign-finance fraud, violations of election laws and other crimes too numerous to name. Nevertheless, surely these same people would stop short of rigging voting machines to steal elections. Yeah, right!

■ "Hurricane Gumbo" by Mike Davis and Anthony Fontenot [Nov. 7] was an enjoyable, interesting, powerful article. I was born in New Orleans but moved here to Madison because of my father's job. We often went back to visit relatives in New Orleans and Baton Rouge, and we also visited Cajun country. It was, then as now, a special place with special people. The article is an excellent piece of writing—and the cover had me drooling!

Chuck Eikel

■ "Hurricane Gumbo" is what America was—people helping people. Not depending on the government for help. Lesson 101 in life: Never depend on the government, depend on yourself. This is the old-time America, and this is the way it should be. Having "company" and taking care of people in a crisis. That is the way I have always lived. The poor people can always add another potato to the pot and invite company into their homes. We can always find another bed and a blanket, or if necessary find a place on the floor for someone to sleep. I've taken groceries to friends in need, even when I was living from paycheck to paycheck, and I've always been blessed. Thank you for the wonderful article. I want to meet these people. I would truly belong.

Virginia Harp

■ "Hurricane Gumbo." It hurt to read that. That is what I once believed all America was like. Today that America lives on only in exceptional communities like Evangeline Parish. Bush & Co. must fear their spirit of love, sense of community and the shining example they set for the rest of us.

Janett Elliott

Fort Bragg, Calif.

■ Reports say multinational corporations like Mr. Cheney's Halliburton are being given no-bid contracts for repair and reconstruction work in New Orleans and on the Gulf Coast. This, rather than using local firms and local displaced workers, and the Bush Administration's efforts to remove minimum-wage requirements, makes one think of its direct opposite: De Witt Clinton building the Erie Canal.

Peter Bernstein, in Wedding of the Waters, reports that a "crucial decision" of the canal commission was "to assign as much of the digging as possible to local people instead of enlisting a limited group of large-scale contractors." The "great ditch" across New York was the world's largest such undertaking at that time, some 400 miles through dark forests and rugged mountains. In 1826 it was completed on schedule, within budget. That was almost 200 years ago. Are those days gone forever?

'GUMBO' UPDATE, EVANGELINE PARISH

■ The Ville Platte Shelter is now placing the last of the 3,000 families left homeless in Ville Platte by Hurricane Katrina. "I have about three families left, and they're all going to wake up on Thanksgiving morning in their own home," says Jennifer Vidrine, shelter coordinator, who has managed to find houses or apartments provided by parish residents. FEMA, which finally arrived in mid-November, has trailers, but to date no one has access to them. Vidrine notes, "It's amazing, the government money that's being wasted. FEMA has twenty telephones, two computers and two printers, guarded by twenty-four-hour security contracted to Blackwater." She also notes that Blackwater is "good at what they do. They just don't have nothing to do in a place where we all leave our doors open." To thank Nation readers for their generous donations, Vidrine sends the recipe for Hurricane Gumbo, which the shelter will be serving on Thanksgiving. "On behalf of everyone here," says Vidrine, "Merci beaucoup."

HURRICANE GUMBO

1 cup oil
1 cup flour
4 qts. water
2 large onions, chopped
1 large bell pepper, chopped
2 stalks celery, chopped
1/2 cup parsley, chopped
1/2 cup green onions, chopped
Garlic, cut or diced, to taste (optional)
2 lbs. smoked sausage, sliced
2 lbs. shrimp, peeled & deveined
1 lb. peeled crab meat
1 qt. oysters
1 qt. oyster water
Salt & pepper to taste

Make a roux (you can buy Kary's Roux in a jar, but a homemade roux makes the best gumbo) by browning flour in oil until dark brown—the darker the roux, the stronger the gumbo (this takes 6–12 minutes). Stir roux constantly so it won't burn. Do not leave roux unattended—do not answer the phone or the door while cooking the roux—it will burn.

In a large pot, add water, onions, bell pepper, celery, parsley, green onions, garlic and the roux. Cook together at medium heat until seasoning is soft and clear (about 1 hour); add sausage midway in the cooking. Then add shrimp, crab meat, oysters and oyster water. Reduce heat to low and cook slowly for about 30 minutes. Add salt and pepper to taste. Serve over rice. Serves 12.

Gumbo notes: You may also use a cut-up hen instead of seafood; put in hen at the beginning with all the seasoning and cook to a boil for an hour.

The Murtha Moment

History may well record that the beginning of the end of the American nightmare in Iraq came on November 17, when an old warrior said it was time for the troops to come home. But that will happen only if Congressional Democrats seize the opportunity that Representative John Murtha has offered them to become the tribune of popular sentiment against the war. Like many Americans, Murtha, a Korean and Vietnam war veteran who for three decades has been the pre-eminent Democratic hawk in the House, did not come quickly to the conclusion that the fight in Iraq will not be won by sacrificing more American lives. A backer of the 2002 resolution authorizing George W. Bush to use force, Murtha remained a defender of the misadventure long after many Democrats, and even some Republicans, began to question it. But when Murtha moved, he moved all the way. Describing the war as the result of "a flawed policy wrapped in illusion," he told Congress. "Our military is suffering. The future of the country is at risk." The retired colonel, who during his thirty-seven years as a marine earned a Bronze Star and two Purple Hearts on the field of battle, closed his address by saying what needed to be said, "Our military has done everything that has been asked of them.... It is time to bring them home."

Because Murtha has for decades been the Democrat closest to the Pentagon—and a frequent ally of Republican Presidents on military issues—his statement shocked the Bush Administration as no other show of Congressional opposition has since Bush and his aides began plotting to invade and occupy Iraq. The fear on the part of the Administration was palpable and led to a counterattack that was as fierce as it was ridiculous. White House spokesman Scott McClellan said that it is "baffling that [Murtha] is endorsing the policy positions of Michael Moore and the extreme liberal wing of the Democratic Party." Vice President Cheney suggested that Murtha and other war-supporters-turned-critics were losing their "backbone." Ohio Republican Representative Jean Schmidt went so far as to dismiss the retired marine as a "coward" during the bizarre debate over a trumped-up attempt by House GOP leaders to warp Murtha's message into a "cut and run" resolution. None of the efforts to trash Murtha worked, as evidenced by Bush's calling off the dogs and offering some words of conciliation.

The mistake made by too many observers on both sides of the partisan divide was to try to establish who had come out ahead in the first skirmishes. Did Murtha's statement capture the imagination of the American people? Did White House battering of the Congressman minimize the damage? These calculations will ultimately prove to be beside the point. As Murtha noted, after being overwhelmed with messages of support from veterans and family members of troops serving in Iraq, "The public turned against this war before I said it. The public is emotionally tied into finding a solution to this thing, and that's what I hope this Administration is going to find out."

For that to happen, however, Democratic leaders must get the message as well. After Murtha spoke up, a number of key Democrats distanced themselves from the man they have so frequently turned to as their spokesman when they want to appear tough on military matters. "Jack Murtha went out and spoke for Jack Murtha," griped Representative Rahm Emanuel, who as chair of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee is supposed to be in charge of figuring out how to mount the most politically effective opposition to the Administration and its House allies. Instead, Emanuel told reporters who asked where House Democratic leaders stand on the war, "At the right time, we will have a position." If anyone wants to know why Democrats struggle to gain traction even as popular opinion turns sharply against the Bush Administration, they need only follow Emanuel's pronouncements.

Murtha is right: The public has turned against the war. The job of Democrats and responsible Republicans in Congress is to give voice to that opposition, a process begun with the Homeward Bound resolution, co-sponsored by House Democrat Neil Abercrombie and Republican Walter Jones. Murtha has made the task easier by offering a serious, workable plan for bringing the troops home quickly and for focusing on the real work—much of it diplomatic—of stabilizing Iraq. Democrats must recognize, as Murtha has, that by putting aside politics and doing what is right for the country they will not only establish their party as the alternative that is needed; they will isolate the Administration and create a space where sensible Republicans can join a new bipartisan drive to get this country's troops out of the Iraq quagmire.

COMMENT

Alito, the CAP Crusader

Campus newspapers aren't generally known for making waves inside the Beltway. Recently, however, the Daily Princetonian published a story that merits attention from senators gearing up for the confirmation hearings of Samuel Alito, George W. Bush's nominee to replace Sandra Day O'Connor on the Supreme Court. As Chanakya Sethi reported in a November 18 article for the paper, in 1985 Princeton graduate and conservative Republican Alito sought to impress his colleagues in the Reagan Administration, where he was applying to become deputy assistant attorney general, by touting his membership in an organization called Concerned Alumni of Princeton.

Launched in 1972, the year Alito graduated, CAP had an innocuous-sounding name that disguised a less benign agenda, which included preventing women and minorities from entering an institution that had long been a bastion of white male privilege. In a 1973 article in Prospect, a magazine CAP published, Shelby Cullom Davis, one of its founders, harked back to the days when a gathering of Princeton alumni consisted of "a body of men, relatively homogeneous in interests and backgrounds." Lamented Cullom Davis: "I cannot envisage a similar happening in the future with an undergraduate student population of approximately 40% women and minorities, such as the Administration has proposed." Another article published that same year bemoaned the fact that "the makeup of the Princeton student body has changed drastically for the worse" in recent years—Princeton had begun admitting women in 1969—and wondered aloud what might happen if the university adopted a "sex-blind" policy "removing limits on the number of women." In an unsuccessful effort to forestall this frightening development, the executive committee of CAP published a statement in December 1973 that affirmed unequivocally, "Concerned Alumni of Princeton opposes adoption of a sex-blind admission policy."

By the time Alito was readying his 1985 job application with the Reagan Administration, the admission of women and minorities was well established at Nassau Hall, but this did not stop

CAP from lamenting the consequences. "People nowadays just don't seem to know their place," fretted a 1983 Prospect essay titled "In Defense of Elitism." "Everywhere one turns blacks and hispanics are demanding jobs simply because they're black and hispanic, the physically handicapped are trying to gain equal representation in professional sports, and homosexuals are demanding that government vouchsafe them the right to bear children." By this point the editor of Prospect was Dinesh D'Souza, who brought to its pages a new level of coarseness aimed at those who did not know their place. "Here at Princeton homosexuals are on the rampage," complained a 1984 news item in Prospect—this after a gay student group had dared to protest being denied permission to hold a dance at a campus club. Another article poked fun at Sally Frank, a Princeton alumna who was suing the university for denying women access to all-male eating clubs. It noted that a Rhode Island woman who'd won a discrimination suit against a mining company had subsequently died in an on-the-job accident. "Sally Frank, take note," it quipped.

Some argue that Alito's membership in the organization hardly proves he shared such views. "It would be outrageously inaccurate to say Sam was deeply involved in the group, and he certainly wasn't in charge of choosing the articles," T. Harding Jones, who edited Prospect during the 1970s, told me, adding that CAP's main goals were strengthening the alumni's voice and championing a more ideologically balanced curriculum. Diane Weeks begs to differ. Weeks graduated from Princeton three years after Alito did and went on to work with him as an assistant US Attorney in New Jersey. In an interview she took pains to stress that she considers Alito "a man of integrity" with a first-rate legal mind. But, she added, "when I saw CAP on that 1985 job application, I was flabbergasted. I was totally stunned. I couldn't believe it." CAP, she said, "made it clear to women like me that we were not wanted on campus. And he is touting his membership in this group in 1985, thirteen years after he graduated. He's not a young man by this point, and I don't buy for a second that he was doing it just to get a job. Membership in CAP gives a good sense of what someone's personal beliefs are. I'm very troubled by this, and if I were on the Senate I would want some answers."

She is not alone. On the same day the article in the Daily Princetonian appeared, People for the American Way requested access to the records of CAP currently stored at the Library of Congress, in the archive of former National Review publisher William Rusher, so that the full story of its formation and, perhaps, of Alito's role in it can be learned. In the meantime, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee might take the time to leaf through some of Prospect's back issues and formulate questions for the candidate. Is the Princeton graduate slated to replace the first female Supreme Court Justice proud of his affiliation with an organization that attempted to prevent women and minorities from receiving the same education he did? If not, why did he flaunt his membership in it? What does this say about his character, and about the kind of place he would ultimately like America to be? EYAL PRESS

Waist Deep in Big Oil

The mid-November revelation in the Washington Post that as early as February 2001 senior executives of at least four of the country's biggest oil companies met with aides to Vice President Cheney has reopened the debate over Big Oil's influence on the Bush Administration's energy policy. The immediate controversy concerns whether executives of ExxonMobil, Conoco, Shell and BP America misled the Senate Energy and Commerce committees when they denied knowledge of the meetings in testimony on November 9. The leaked documents confirm that these meetings in fact took place, but because Republican chair Ted Stevens declined to oblige the executives to testify under oath—which committee Democrats strongly protested at the time—they cannot be charged with perjury. (They could, however, be charged with making false or fraudulent statements to Congress.)

The executives' evasive answers have renewed questions about the functioning of the secretive White House Energy Task Force, especially its unwillingness to draft policies that transcend the interests of Big Oil. The focus on industry profits and prevarication, although it's important, misses a much more important reason for the Bush Administration's desperate attempts to keep documents related to the task force secret. In a word: Iraq.

While Iraq was absent from the oil executives' November 9 testimony, it is clear that the country and its immense petroleum reserves were on the minds of the Administration and its industry friends from the moment Bush assumed office, and for good reason: With Americans consuming one-quarter of the world's daily petroleum production of 84 million barrels, scientists and industry leaders were by 2001 increasingly considering the possibility that the "age of peak oil production" was approaching much sooner than had previously been acknowledged.

Once peak oil is reached, it will no longer be possible to extract enough oil from the earth to replace what we consume, thereby setting off a potentially explosive competition for the world's remaining supplies. In such a scenario, insuring American access to, and where possible leverage or even control over, the world's major oil deposits would be a natural concern for an Administration umbilically tied to Big Oil, particularly in the context of escalating competition with an aggressive, energy-hungry China.

The belief in peak oil, while not universally shared, has had increasing scientific support in recent years. And it is reflected in the November 9 testimony of Chevron chair David O'Reilly, who explained that in the context of "growing demand for energy, particularly in Asia...oil production in mature basins, particularly in Europe and North America, has been declining.... Meanwhile, OPEC production has increased, but is now approaching its current capacity to deliver." Yet Iraq has, in addition to its proven reserves—second only to Saudi Arabia's—vast untapped fields that remain, in the words of one industry analyst, "virgin territory."

In this context, the few documents that have been made public from the Energy Task Force (thanks to the conservative watchdog Judicial Watch) reveal not only that industry executives met with Cheney's staff but that a map of Iraq and an accompanying list of "Iraq oil foreign suitors" were the center of discussion. The map erased all features of the country save the location of its main oil deposits, divided into nine exploration blocks. The accompanying list of suitors revealed that dozens of companies from thirty countries—but not the United States—were either in discussions over or in direct negotiations for rights to some of the best remaining oilfields on earth.

It's not hard to surmise how the participants in these meetings felt about this situation. As Deutsche Bank explained in a 2002 report titled "Baghdad Bazaar: Big Oil in Iraq," with upward of $38 billion in projects already agreed to by the Iraqi government, the major US companies would lose if Saddam made a deal with the UN, whereas the Europeans, Russians and Chinese would come out ahead. In a post-Saddam Iraq, however, the US oil majors—specifically, according to the report, ExxonMobil and ChevronTexaco—could manage the country's resources. No wonder the executives of those companies denied meeting with Cheney's staff only weeks after George W. Bush's inauguration—and fully half a year before September 11 and the subsequent concrete planning of the Iraq War.

The centrality of Iraq to the task force meetings requires us to reconsider the calculus used by senior Bush Administration planners in judging the risks and benefits of invading and occupying Iraq, and its resulting definitions of success. The thinking they reveal suggests that neither democracy nor a reduction of violence in the country, however desirable in theory, is necessary to achieve core US objectives.

Instead, insuring a long-term US military presence in Iraq and a significant (if behind-the-scenes) role in managing and developing its petroleum sector together constitute a prize of immense economic and geostrategic value for the Administration and its corporate sponsors. In fact, at the very moment the first Energy Task Force meetings with industry officials were held, in February 2001, the National Security Council issued a directive for staff to cooperate with the task force in the "melding" of new "operational policies towards rogue states" with "actions regarding the capture of new and existing oil and gas fields." No place on earth was more amenable to such melding than Iraq.

From this perspective, it is possible to argue that despite great human and financial costs, the United States—or rather the oil, arms and related industries, if not US citizens—may still "win" a war for which planning could well have commenced as early as the first weeks of the Bush Administration. While increasing numbers of politicians and pundits are calling for troop withdrawals, the subject of a total US withdrawal remains largely unbroachable within the political establishment. Senator Joseph Biden put it succinctly when—after the furor over John Murtha's courageous demands for a pullout—he warned that if the United States brings the troops home, nothing will protect "our core interests," which, tellingly, he did not define. For their part, Iraqis have been so overwhelmed by the daily grind of violence and failed reconstruction efforts, they were unable to challenge Washington by including in the recently approved Constitution provisions prohibiting foreign military bases or foreign management of the oil industry—two crucial markers of genuine sovereignty.

"Maybe after the next election," one senior Iraqi government adviser explained to me. Perhaps; but if the United States can manage the chaos and violence in Iraq in a manner that avoids a significant escalation of US casualties while making it too dangerous for Iraq's elected government to "ask us to leave" anytime soon, the sponsors of Operation Iraqi Freedom can look forward to a happy retirement indeed. Undermining Haiti

History is repeating itself in Haiti, as democracy is being destroyed for the second time in the past fifteen years. Amazingly, the main difference seems to be that this time it is being done openly and in broad daylight, with the support of the "international community" and the United Nations. The first coup against Haiti's democratically elected government, in September 1991, was condemned even by the George H.W. Bush Administration. This although the CIA had funded the leaders of the coup and—according to a founder of the death squads that murdered thousands of people during the 1991–94 military dictatorship—also sponsored the repression. All this was covert, and the official position of the United States and most other countries was that the dictatorship was not legitimate.

But when in February 2004 Haiti's democratically elected president, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, was overthrown for the second time by remnants of that prior dictatorship—including convicted mass murderers and former death squad leaders—this was considered a legitimate "regime change." The Caricom countries, showing great courage, objected strenuously, as did some members of the US Congress. But these voices were not

From George Dennis, president and founder of TV Ears, Inc.

"The inspiration for TV Ears® was based on the well-known statistic that nearly 80% of people with hearing loss go undiagnosed and untreated for a variety of reasons which may include vanity or cost of treatment. TV Ears® has proven to be an appealing product to the average person and an excellent introduction to those seeking improved hearing health."

Hear every word with today's technology!

- Television Audio Processing. (TAP) The transmitter processes the audio from your TV or other audio devices and amplifies regular dialogue, hard to hear voices, and whispers.
- Automatic Volume Control. (AVC) Selectively compresses loud bursts of volume that are annoying when watching a program, channel surfing, or during commercials.
- Infrared technology. TV Ears' infrared technology provides safe, superior sound quality without interference and frequency drifting. Transmits up to 900 square feet.
- Left-Right balance control. Allows you to adjust the volume for rich, high-quality sound in both ears.
- Individual controls. Multiple headsets can be adjusted to the user's personal needs.
- Long-lasting charge. You can quickly charge two headsets at the same time, and TV-Ears will function up to 10 hours on a 3-hour charge. Charger included.

"Now my husband can have the volume as loud as he needs… and I can have the TV on "Mute" or at my hearing level. "TV Ears" are so uncumbersome that Jack forgets he has them on! We take them to the movie theater and he can once again hear and understand the dialogue. We have given "TV Ears" as a gift to dear friends. They are absolutely the finest product." Sincerely

— Darlene and Jack B., CA

Try them yourself! If you aren't totally amazed…send them back! We're so sure you'll be absolutely astonished with the increase in sound and clarity when using the TV Ears®, that we're backing them with *first*STREET's exclusive in-home 90-day trial. If you aren't completely satisfied, simply return them for the product purchase price.

powerful enough to influence the course of events.

The fix was in: The US Agency for International Development and the International Republican Institute (the international arm of the Republican Party) had spent hundreds of millions of dollars to create and organize an opposition—however small in numbers—and to make Haiti under Aristide ungovernable. The whole scenario was strikingly similar to the series of events that led to the coup against Venezuelan President Hugo Chávez in April 2002. The same US organizations were involved, and the opposition—as in Venezuela—controlled and used the major media as a tool for destabilization. And in both cases the coup leaders, joined by Washington, announced to the world that the elected president had "voluntarily resigned"—which later turned out to be false.

Washington had an added weapon against the Haitian government. Taking advantage of Haiti's desperate poverty and dependence on foreign aid, it stopped international aid to the government, from the summer of 2000 until the 2004 coup. As economist Jeffrey Sachs has pointed out, the World Bank also contributed to the destabilization effort by cutting off funding.

Now the coup government, headed by unelected Prime Minister Gérard Latortue, is trying to organize an election. But it is an election that would not be seen as legitimate in any country, not even Iraq. Everything is being arranged so that the country's largest political party, Fanmi Lavalas—which at any moment before the coup would have overwhelmingly swept national elections—cannot win. Many of the party's leaders are in jail, generally on trumped-up or nonexistent charges, including the constitutional prime minister, Yvon Neptune, and Father Gérard Jean-Juste, a Catholic priest and likely presidential candidate if he were not jailed. Jean-Juste has been declared a prisoner of conscience by Amnesty International. Other leaders are in hiding or in exile, since the murder of political opponents is common. In one massacre in August, witnesses described Haitian police arriving at a soccer match and pointing out people in the crowd, who were then hacked to death by civilian accomplices with machetes. UN troops have also been implicated in some of the violence, and the UN has promised an investigation.

The coup government, with an electoral commission that has no pretense of impartiality, is also set to disenfranchise a huge number of its opponents. There have been about one-twentieth as many registration sites for this election as there were for previous elections, and it is mostly Fanmi Lavalas voters who have been excluded. According to party spokespeople, the party has not registered any candidates for president, and many of its voters will boycott the election unless their demands for the release of political prisoners and an end to the persecution are met.

The election has been postponed three times, most recently to December 27. Setting the date two days after Christmas will also help minimize voter turnout.

Will the world accept this farce of an election? The Bush Administration and its allies seem to be hoping that Haiti is just too poor and too black for anyone to care about whether democratic, constitutional or even human rights are respected there. They have also cited the violence from both sides of the conflict to disguise the fact that most of that violence is directed at supporters of the ousted government to prevent them from returning to power through a fair election.

But if this election goes forward without the release of political prisoners and the restoration of basic rights and security, it will not only be a tragedy for Haiti. It will be a throwback to the days when the United States was able to destabilize, overthrow and replace elected governments that it did not like. It will be a huge step backward for democracy in this hemisphere. MARK WEISBROT

BURYING PLAN B

■ As we've seen over and over, in the Bush Administration politics trumps science every time. Most recently, the Government Accountability Office exposed the FDA's apparent cave-in to political pressure in its ruling against making Plan B, the morning-after pill, available without prescription. (Contrary to all studies, the religious right claims its greater availability would encourage promiscuity among teenagers.) The GAO called the FDA decision "unusual" and way out of line with its normal procedures on over-the-counter drugs. The secretive ruling by top FDA political appointees scorned the counsel of staff experts and an advisory panel, which recommended over-the-counter status by an overwhelming vote. A key dissenter on that advisory panel was one Dr. David Hager, a religious zealot and alleged wife abuser. His critical behind-the-scenes role in this regulatory travesty was described in our pages by Ayelish McGarvey ("Dr. Hager's Family Values," May 30). Hager is no longer an FDA adviser, but his bad advice lingers on in a very bad policy.

MINORITY/MAJORITY

■ Permanent Minority. A number of corporate lobbyists with Democratic ties landed a story in the Hill newspaper, criticizing House Democrats for distancing themselves from the lobbying community. The story also notes that House minority whip Steny Hoyer is seeking "to make himself the first contact for K Street" on Capitol Hill, "hold[ing] regular meetings with lobbyists." Such stories suggest Democrats are fudging what should be an all-out effort to draw a contrast between themselves and the Republicans' culture of corruption.

■ Toward the Majority. The same Hill story notes that House minority leader Nancy Pelosi and Representative George Miller are not bending to the lobbyists' criticism and are pressing forward with their agenda to crack down on lobbying and ethics abuses. —DAVID SIROTA

The Fall of the One-Party Empire

For some time I have been suggesting here that the aim of Republican strategy has been a Republican Party that permanently runs the United States and a United States that permanently runs the world. The two aims have been driven by a common purpose: to steadily and irreversibly increase and consolidate power in GOP hands, leading in the direction of a one-party state at home and a global American empire abroad. The most critical question has been whether American democracy, severely eroded but still breathing, would bring down the Republican machine, or whether the Republican machine—call it the budding one-party global empire—would bring down American democracy. This week, it looks as if democracy, after years of decline, has gained the upper hand.

The choice was and remains: empire or republic? Just a few years ago the "sole superpower," the new Rome, master of the "unipolar" world, seemed to many to be bestriding the globe. Some, like columnist Charles Krauthammer, were reveling in the triumph of "the American hegemon." "History has given you an empire, if you will keep it," he said, traducing Benjamin Franklin, who had said at the Constitutional Convention that the United States was a republic if you can keep it.

Others, like writer Michael Ignatieff, in a more somber mood, were preparing to shoulder the empire's inescapable global "burdens," which meant "enforcing such order as there is in the world and doing so in the American interest." Still others, like journalist Robert Kaplan, were touring the empire's far-flung garrisons, lionizing the "imperial grunts" and counseling that America's civil leaders should yield to military direction. Indeed, he said that the "very distinction between our civilian and military operations overseas is eroding." The model for the future, he thought, should be the United States' long history of military intervention in Latin America.

But where is the American empire now, where the new Rome? Where are its subject peoples, its provinces, its Macedonias and Carthages and Egypts, its victorious armies and triumphal parades? Where, for that matter, are its arts and letters, its Colossus of Rhodes, its Pyramids? Where is its Virgil? Would that be Bill O'Reilly, fountain of abusive misinformation, or Dan Bartlett, the White House Misspokesman? Can someone give me a tour of this realm? We might begin in Iraq. But perhaps we had better not. The tour would have to be cut short in the Green Zone, the American compound in downtown Iraq and the only "secure" territory in the country. Some 200 Iraqis have been killed recently in bomb attacks (horrors scarcely mentioned in the debate in this country). As for the Iraqi "government," these quislings are unable to follow imperial orders—they are deficient even as puppets. Their main accomplishment has been to open a torture center, perhaps in imitation of our own Abu Ghraib, or perhaps following the model of Saddam Hussein.

Will Afghanistan be the next stop on our imperial tour? This will be the high point, for the pervasive rule by war- and drug lords in that country is mitigated, at least in the capital city, by the administration of Hamid Karzai. Shall we go, as the President did recently, to Latin America, which Kaplan recommended as a dress rehearsal for imperial rule? We'll find that the United States is despised there, leading to the rise of left-wing leaders from Venezuela to Argentina. Or should we follow the President to Asia, where in defiance of his will North Korea has built a nuclear arsenal and China, with $252 billion in US Treasury bills, has emerged as the financier of the exploding American deficit?

The imperial dreams are in ruins. But the ruins, strangely, are not of things that were built and then collapsed; they are of fantasies. We are not dealing here with the decline of a new Rome. It is not that a great power has been brought down—although the casualties of the war, American and Iraqi, have been tragically real—but that a world of fancy and fraud has been exploded by facts.

And the one-party state at home? It was not the mirage that the empire was. The structure of the American state, and to a lesser extent the economy, really has been deeply altered. Real hundreds of millions of dollars have poured into the coffers of the GOP while real hundreds of billions poured into the pockets of the rich. Real laws were passed that tore gaping holes in the Bill of Rights. A real shift of the judiciary toward the radical right was set in motion. An unprecedented concentration of power—fusing government, corporations, the military, portions of the media and a hugely expanded secret police apparatus—was created. And yet this structure, too, has been shaken by recent events.

As happened in the Vietnam era, the war came home. The Administration's disrespect for law led to law-breaking. Somehow, the law-enforcement system in and around the Justice Department has retained enough independence to serve as a check on abuses of executive power. Indictments have been brought, and others are likely to follow. The mechanisms whereby the foreign debacle has led to the domestic setbacks for the Administration are complex, but the broad outlines are already clear: The failed empire, in the shape of its failed war, has driven down the President's support to the point at which others, cowed until now, feel free to attack him. The institutions of government and the economy, drawn like iron filings into the magnetic field of power, failed at first to check the Administration. But the public, represented by opinion polls, has stepped in, and the institutions are following. Not since the Soviet Union fell fourteen years ago have we witnessed a greater reversal of fortune.

Unmaking the conglomeration of unaccountable power built up around the Republican Party in recent years will hardly be the work of a week, and the outcome is anything but certain. But if the effort succeeds, historians may one day write that the fake American empire was the Achilles' heel of the real one-party state.

The Truth About the War

BEAT THE DEVIL

Here we have one of the most widely derided Presidents in the history of the United States and a war abhorred by a majority of Americans, and the Democrats have near zero traction as a credible party of opposition. The sequence of events after Representative Jack Murtha's great speech tells the story. Listen to Murtha and you are hearing how the US commanders in Iraq really see the situation: "Many say the Army is broken. Some of our troops are on a third deployment. Recruitment is down even as the military has lowered its standards. They expect to take 20 percent category 4, which is the lowest category, which they said they'd never take.... Much of our ground equipment is worn out." On Iraq's condition: "Oil production and energy production are below prewar level. You remember they said that was going to pay for the war, and it's below prewar level. Our reconstruction efforts have been crippled by the security situation.... Unemployment is 60 percent.... Clean water is scarce, and they only spent $500 million of the $2.2 billion appropriated for water projects." "And, most importantly—this is the most important point—incidents have increased from 150 a week to over 700 in the last year."

Then, amid his tears, came Murtha's sketches of war's consequences in today's America: "Now, let me personalize this thing for you.... I have a young fellow in my district who was blinded, and he lost his foot. And they did everything they could for him at Walter Reed, then they sent him home. His father was in jail; he had nobody at home. Imagine this: Young kid that age—22, 23 years old—goes home to nobody. VA did everything they could do to help him. He was reaching out, so they sent him—to make sure that he was blind, they sent him to Johns Hopkins. Johns Hopkins started to send him bills. Then the collection agency started sending bills.... Imagine, a young person being blinded, without a foot, and he's getting bills from a collection agency."

Murtha's call for rapid pullout of US troops from Iraq was capped by one of the most amazing expressions of political reality ever uttered on Capitol Hill: "I believe we need to turn Iraq over to the Iraqis. I believe before the Iraqi elections, scheduled for mid-December, the Iraqi people and the emerging government must be put on notice: The United States will immediately redeploy—immediately redeploy.... All of Iraq must know that Iraq is free, free from a United States occupation. And I believe this will send a signal to the Sunnis to join the political process."

This was a 73-year-old Marine veteran with Purple Hearts and a Bronze Star, one of the armed forces' most constant supports. What better advocate for a speedy end to an unpopular war could the Democrats ever hope for? Yet barely had he stopped speaking when the halls of Congress echoed with the squeaks of Democrats whimpering in panic as they skipped clear of Murtha's shadow. John Kerry hurried before the cameras of MSNBC to frag Murtha and tell Chris Matthews how he, John Kerry, has a better plan, involving something in the nature of a schedule for withdrawal possibly limping into action in 2006.

Nancy Pelosi, the Democrats' leader in the House, abruptly retreated from a scheduled press conference expressing support for Murtha. Scenting weakness, the Republicans put up a resolution calling for withdrawal now. Democratic panic escalated into pell-mell retreat, shouting back over their shoulders that they weren't going to fall for such a dirty Republican trick. Why not? What better chance will they get to go on record against the war? In the end just three Democrats (Cynthia McKinney of Georgia, José Serrano of New York and Robert Wexler of Florida) voted for immediate withdrawal and six voted "present."

The truth about the war may be clear to Murtha and 60 percent of the American people, but not to the three Democratic senators interested in the presidential nomination in 2008. Even after Murtha's lead Russell Feingold continues to mumble about the "target date" for withdrawal being 2006, as does Kerry. For her part Hillary Clinton announced just before the Thanksgiving recess that an immediate US withdrawal from Iraq would be "a big mistake" that "would cause more problems for us in America.... It will matter to us if Iraq totally collapses into civil war, if it becomes a failed state."

The importance of Murtha's speech was that it vaulted over these laboriously prudent schedules into what is actually happening in Iraq. As his military sources in Iraq most certainly urged him to point out, the main fuel for the Sunni Arab insurgency is foreign occupation. So long as it continues, the resistance is likely to go on. The idea that the Sunnis taking part in the election somehow means a shift from military action is also baloney.

Would there actually be a power vacuum followed by civil war if the United States withdrew? The Sunnis can't take Baghdad. They can't penetrate the main Kurdish or Shiite areas. How exactly is the US military preventing a civil war at the moment? The refusal of the Shiites to retaliate is the most important factor here, and this is primarily the result of Grand Ayatollah Ali al-Sistani standing firmly against it.

Now suppose Sistani calls for a withdrawal. Then the United States and Britain will have little choice but to go, probably over an eighteen-month period. As recently as late November a gathering in Cairo of Sunni, Shiite and Kurdish leaders (under the auspices of the Arab League) called for a timetable for US withdrawal and also said that Iraq's opposition had a "legitimate right to resistance." The Sunnis are not going to stop fighting while the occupation continues. The quid pro quo for US withdrawal would presumably be a cease-fire by the Sunnis and an end to suicide bombing attacks.

All those Democratic Party withdrawal dates are predicated on the idea that the Iraqi army and security forces will be built up and can take over. This scenario is as unrealistic as calls to "internationalize" the occupying force. All the evidence shows that only an agreement on the US departure will lead to an end to the armed resistance, just as Murtha said. ■

Ho-Ho-Holiday Donations—Early Edition

SUB JECT to DE BATE

It's been a tough year. Tsunami. Hurricane. Earthquake. War. Poverty. Injustice. Here's a list of extraordinary groups that are working to make next year better. Put them on your holiday list, right after the champagne.

Organization of Women's Freedom in Iraq. Incredibly, given the Bush Administration's professed concern for Iraqi women, the small network of shelters founded by heroic secular feminist Yanar Mohammed offers the country's only refuge for women fleeing domestic violence, rape, honor killing and forced marriage. As religious extremism and civil strife increase, the need grows ever greater. Help Iraqi women start new, safer lives by writing a check to MADRE, the women's international social justice group, with OWFI (or Iraq) on the memo line. If you go to www.madre.org/holiday, you can honor friends and relatives with a donation; MADRE will send a beautiful card announcing your gift, and nobody will have to return a sweater (MADRE, 121 West 27th Street, #301, New York, NY 10001).

Women for Afghan Women/Afghan Women's Fund. Despite some progress, Afghanistan remains the poorest country on earth and one of the worst in which to be a woman. Tragically, much US aid to Afghanistan is lost to mismanagement and corruption. A donation to WAW's Afghan Women's fund, by contrast, goes straight to help poor women and children. (Full disclosure: I'm on WAW's advisory board, but quite wisely they never ask me for advice.) This year its major project is building a girls' school in Herat province. The land has already been purchased, so if you have a spare $50,000 you can fund the whole thing and transform the lives of more than 1,000 little girls in one swoop. Smaller donations will be warmly welcomed, too. (Checks made out to WAW/AWF can be mailed to WAW, 32-17 College Point Blvd., Suite 206, Flushing, NY 11354; www.womenforafghanwomen.org.)

University Scholarships for South African Students. Founded in 1990 by philosopher Robert Paul Wolff, this need-based fund has helped educate more than 1,200 black, colored and Indian students. With the deepening of the AIDS crisis—a just released UNAIDS/WHO report estimates that one-third of South Africans are HIV-positive—USSAS has focused on supporting those committed to combating the disease and related social devastation. It currently finances almost 100 young people, including ten medical students, twenty students of social work and fifty undergraduates. You can help fund even more. (Send checks c/o Wolff to 107 Buffam Road, Pelham, MA 01002; www.ussas.com.)

Jackson Women's Health Organization. Thanks to Sharon Lerner's terrific reporting (February 7), Nation readers knew about the ongoing crisis at Mississippi's sole remaining abortion clinic way before Frontline's shocking documentary aired in early November. Poor women in a poor state, patients often arrive having traveled for hours, children in tow, and spend the night in their cars to get through the mandatory waiting period the Supreme Court, in its wisdom, held was not an undue burden on their reproductive rights. Help the clinic help its patients by donating to its emergency fund for low-income women. (Checks with "Foundation" on the memo line can be mailed to Jackson Women's Health Organization, 2903 North State Street, Jackson, MS 39216.)

Abortion Conversation Project. Do you sometimes feel that the debate over choice is drowning out communication about pregnancy, abortion, sexuality and families? For instance, much as legally compelled parental notification is a bad idea, wouldn't it be good if girls could be helped to involve their parents in an experience that is hard to go through alone? The brainchild of some of the most thoughtful providers in the country—among them Margaret Johnston, Kudra MacCaillech and Karen Kubby—the ACP is looking for donations so it can launch its "Mom, Dad, I'm Pregnant" information project, which includes a website, brochures and counselor training. (Send checks with "Mom, dad website" on the memo line to ACP, 908 King Street, Suite 400W, Alexandria, VA 22314; www.abortionconversation.com/donate.php.)

Reprieve. Fight legal injustice and help the Katrina-ravaged Gulf Coast at the same time! Reprieve is looking for funds to help families of death-sentenced prisoners and exonerated death-row inmates who lost housing and other essentials in the hurricane. Writes co-director Billy Sothern, "It is folks like these who need the most assistance in putting their lives back together—lives that were unimaginably difficult before the storm—and who have been given the least from the government." This is an entirely volunteer organization with no overhead—its costs are borne by the Justice Center of New Orleans, an umbrella organization of nonprofits defending indigents charged with capital crimes in the Deep South. That means 100 percent of your donation goes directly to these extremely needy people (Reprieve, 636 Baronne Street, New Orleans, LA 70113; www.reprieve.org).

North Star Fund. Named for Frederick Douglass's abolitionist newspaper, this group underwrites grassroots social activism in low-income New York City communities. Recent grants went to organizations of immigrants, battered women, teen parents, public housing residents, people living with AIDS, lesbian/gay/bi/transgendered people, Teamsters trying to reform their union, and more. As New York becomes increasingly a city of haves and have-mores, a donation to North Star keeps working-class activists on the map and in the mix (305 Seventh Avenue, 5th floor, New York, NY 10001; www.northstarfund.org).

The Kopkind Colony. Longtime readers treasure the witty, trenchant reporting of Andrew Kopkind, for whom The Nation was home base for many years, and where colleagues still mourn his death, in 1994. The Kopkind Colony carries Andy's legacy forward, with summer residencies for young progressive journalists—think workshops, mentoring, community and fun. You wouldn't believe the slender shoestring the entire operation runs on, which is another way of saying that it really needs your help! (158 Kopkind Road, Guilford, VT 05301; 802-254-4859.) ■

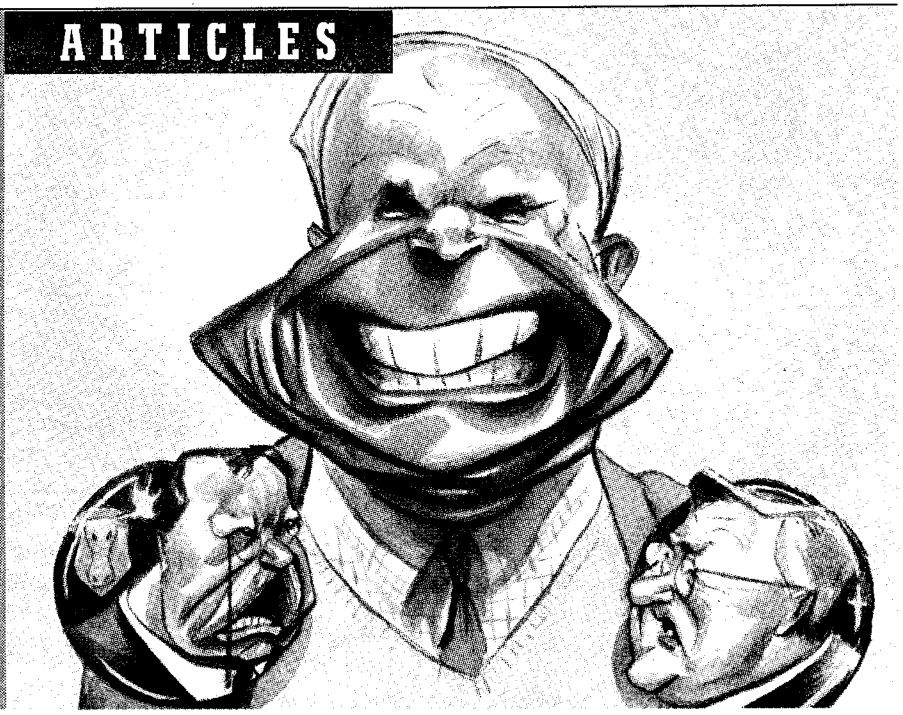
by ARI BERMAN



Over the Senate's August recess, John McCain returned to Arizona to quash a brewing conservative insurgency in his home state. The Arizona Republican Assembly, a grassroots right-wing group, had recently censured McCain for "ignoring the opinions of his constituents expressed in numerous polls and personal pleas." The anti-immigrant Minuteman vigilantes had rallied on the Arizona-Mexico border in protest of his progressive immigration policy. Discord gripped the state GOP leadership. So the man who in 2000 dubbed himself "Luke Skywalker fighting his way out of the Death Star" headed straight into enemy territory, organizing a town hall meeting with rank-and-file conservatives in the desert town of Mesa. "Many of those in the crowd Thursday wore stickers with a circle and a slash—the symbol for 'no'—across the words 'McCain 2008,'" the local East Valley Tribune reported.

But the senator they saw projected a far more conciliatory image than the trash-talking maverick portrayed in the national media. Before the event he had endorsed teaching "intelligent design" alongside evolution in public schools, and he had expressed support for a rigid state ban on gay marriage that denies government benefits to any unmarried couple. After brief opening remarks, McCain took questions for more than two hours, referring to Reagan as "my hero," invoking the support of other conservatives on issues such as stem-cell research and immigration, and strenuously defending President Bush's Iraq policy.

The détente with conservatives that began with his vigorous embrace of Bush during the 2004 campaign has become a full-on charm offensive. "If he decides to run for President, the friendship has to be re-established," says McCain political consultant Max Fose. "There haven't always been town halls. There hasn't always been a dialogue." McCain isn't just reaching out on the home front. His office holds regular meetings with conservative leaders in South Carolina, where his approval rating sits at 65 percent. He has met with the Rev. Jerry Falwell, whom he denounced as one of the religious right's "peddlers of intolerance" after the 2000 South Carolina primary. After the antitax Club for Growth began running ads against McCain in New Hampshire, a state he won in 2000, he reversed positions and supported a procedural repeal of the estate tax. He has endorsed conservative Republican Ken Blackwell for Ohio governor. At the suggestion of conservative activist and longtime nemesis Grover Norquist, he campaigned for Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger's failed referendum initiatives in California, particularly the "paycheck protection" provision targeting unions' political activities. McCain's likely to be the most requested Republican campaigner in 2006 races. "He's the closest thing to a rock star in the Republican Party today," says Michigan Republican Party chair Saul Anuzis.

Unfortunately, most campaigns are a battle between who a politician is and who he needs to be to win. There have always been two sides to McCain: the conservative loyalist and the unpredictable maverick so often featured in the media. In preparation for 2008, McCain has largely chosen to unveil and market the conservative side. Many conservatives are warming to his routine; some are even beginning to like and trust him. It's fair to assume, though, that the more orthodox conservatives agree with McCain, the more he risks alienating moderates and forfeiting the independence that makes him unique and suggests he could become a great President. It's an uncomfortable predicament for a pragmatic problem solver with sky-high approval ratings and crossover appeal. "He'll have to decide whether he wants to be CBS's favorite senator or the Republican nominee," says Norquist. "He can't do both."

In late September, as Bush's presidency tailspinned, McCain headlined a dinner of conservative intellectuals sponsored by The American Spectator magazine. "Campaigning with George W. Bush was one of the proudest moments of my life," McCain declared. He downplayed his differences with Bush over immigration. (Both support a temporary-guest-worker program, but Bush wants illegals to return to their host countries after six years, while McCain advocates a "path to citizenship.") He railed against government spending and urged a hard line on Iran and North Korea. "McCain spoke fervently and with obvious sincerity about how much he admires Bush and the job he has been doing," wrote Michael Barone of US News & World Report.

"He thinks, not necessarily incorrectly, that he can pick off a few of us," says David Keene, chairman of the American Conservative Union, which rates conservative lawmakers. "It adds up to making him acceptable. He doesn't need 65 percent of the party to adore him, but he needs to defang their hostility." In this effort, McCain has been criticizing Republicans mostly from the right, shrewdly bolstering both his anti-establishment and conservative credentials—largely through appeals to what he calls "one of the bases of the Republican Party, a very important one, that believes in fiscal restraint and fiscal discipline." McCain has signed a "No Pork Pledge," fought against wasteful bridges in Alaska and urged deep cuts to nondefense and non-homeland-security-related spending—cuts that Democratic Senate minority leader Harry Reid dubs "immoral." At a recent appearance before the ultraconservative Heritage Foundation, McCain described himself as a "Barry Goldwater Republican" who "revere[s] Ronald Reagan and his stand of limited government." The routine has won him praise from the likes of National Review editor Rich Lowry, who recently wrote: "For the first time in years, conservatives have listened to McCain talk about a high-profile domestic issue and have nodded their heads vigorously."

There have always been two sides to McCain: the conservative loyalist and the unpredictable maverick so often featured in the media.

In fact, McCain has always been far more conservative than either his supporters or detractors acknowledge. In 2004 he earned a perfect 100 percent rating from Phyllis Schlafly's Eagle Forum and a 0 percent from NARAL. Citizens Against Government Waste dubs him a "taxpayer hero." He has opposed extension of the assault-weapons ban, federal hate crimes legislation and the International Criminal Court. He has supported school vouchers, a missile defense shield and private accounts for Social Security. Well before 9/11 McCain advocated a new Reagan Doctrine of "rogue-state rollback."

"He's a foreign policy hawk, a social conservative and a fiscal conservative who believes in tax cuts but not at the expense of the deficit," says Marshall Wittmann, a former McCain staffer and conservative activist who now works at the Democratic Leadership Council. McCain's ideology resembles an exotic cocktail of Teddy Roosevelt, Barry Goldwater and Ronald Reagan—a conservative before conservatism was bankrupted by fundamentalism and corporatism. His centrist reputation simply proves how far right the center has shifted in Republican politics. "The median stance for Senate Republicans in the early 1970s was significantly to the left of current GOP maverick John McCain," write political scientists Jacob Hacker and Paul Pierson in their book Off-Center. "By the early 2000s, however, the median Senate Republican was essentially twice as conservative—just shy of the ultraconservative position of Senator Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania."

Much of the moderates' love affair with McCain, and much of the conservatives' distrust of him, stems from 2000, when The Weekly Standard dubbed his reformist campaign an "insurrection." After the religious right smeared him during the South Carolina primary, McCain condemned Bush as "a Pat Robertson Republican" in Robertson's hometown of Virginia Beach, Virginia. Following Bush's election, McCain continued to stump relentlessly for campaign-finance reform, opposed Bush's tax cuts, became the Democrats' favorite co-sponsor on issues like global warming and a patients' bill of rights and fought government corruption harder than anyone in Congress. By 2004 he was flirting with the idea of becoming John Kerry's running mate.

The turning point came when McCain not only endorsed Bush for re-election but made more than twenty campaign appearances with the President and defended his Iraq policy at the Republican National Convention. Relationships with the Bush team have thawed considerably; when McCain now bucks the White House on, say, uniform Army restrictions on torture, it isn't viewed as a personal betrayal. McCain campaigned with Bush on his push for Social Security privatization last spring. And after leading a gang of fourteen senators who brokered a compromise on judicial nominees and the filibuster, McCain strongly supported all three of Bush's Supreme Court picks. Asked recently by Fox News how he gets along with the White House, McCain responded, "Very well. Very well."

"Do I want to be President? Sure," McCain told the Wall Street Journal in October. "Do I want to run for President? That's the question." Yet it's one of the worst-kept secrets in Washington that McCain is running, so long as his health holds up (he'll be 72 in August 2008, and he bears a deep scar along his swollen left cheek from melanoma treatments). The obvious question then becomes, Can he win?

McCain's staff and supporters believe he can reach "mainstream conservatives"—who value low taxes, less government and an assertive foreign policy more than social concerns—without alienating the middle. Another key, says Greg Stevens, McCain's media adviser from 2000, will be electability. According to one recent national poll, McCain runs neck and neck with Rudy Giuliani and bests Hillary Clinton 52 percent to 39 percent. "The party is pretty heavy with Bush people right now, and they will want to win again," says Stevens. "Many are very interested in John because they think he's got the best chance." Bush's media adviser in 2000 and 2004, Mark McKinnon, has reportedly already signed on with the McCain campaign. McCain's aides even told The New Yorker last May that Bush brain Karl Rove might lend a helping hand. If electability doesn't work, there's always McCain's heroic life story—the Vietnam card. "He was in Hanoi for five years, two spent hanging from one arm," says Stevens. "I'm happy to run that footage." Of course, an overreliance on war-hero machismo could backfire—just ask Kerry.

Even with such a mainstream conservative message, who makes up McCain's base? "It's not the far right but conservative, practical thinkers in the Republican Party," says Fose. And how many of those currently exist? "Enough," he chuckles.

But right-wing Republicans like Norquist still hold McCain's occasional moderation and rebel style in deep suspicion. Many observers believe they will rally around a more ideologically

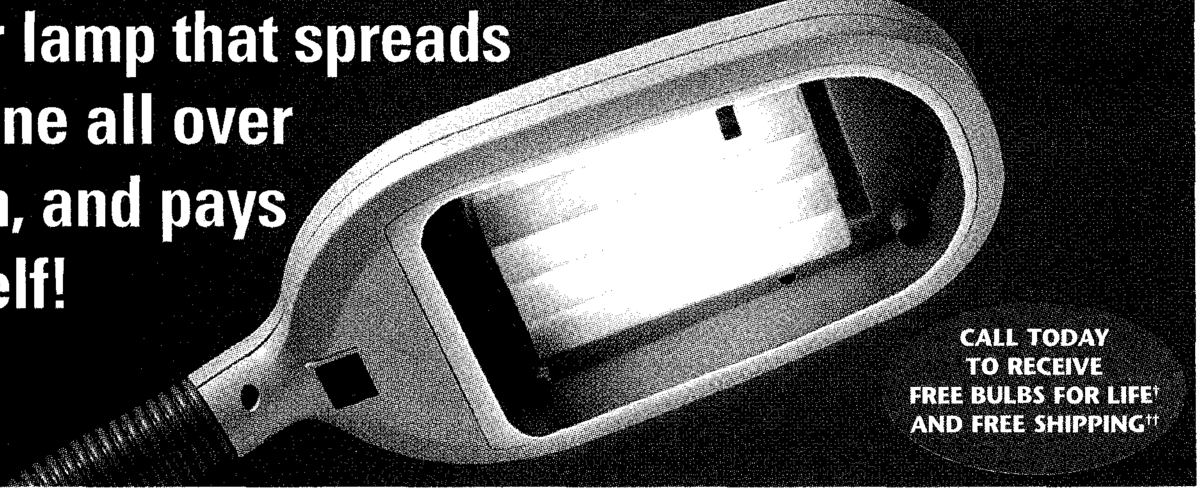
Now get FREE new and improved Bulbs for Life[†]

A floor lamp that spreads sunshine all over a room, and pays for itself!



The Balanced Spectrum® floor lamp combines the benefits of natural daylight indoors with a savings of $77 over the life of one bulb![]

Ever since the first human went into a dark cave and built a fire, people have realized the importance of proper indoor lighting. Unfortunately, since Edison invented the light bulb, lighting technology has remained relatively prehistoric. Modern light fixtures do little to combat many symptoms of improper lighting, such as eyestrain, dryness or burning. As more and more of us spend longer hours in front of a computer monitor, the results are compounded. And the effects of indoor lighting are not necessarily limited to physical well-being. Many people believe that the quantity and quality of light can play a part in one's mood and work performance. Now there's a better way to bring the positive benefits of natural sunlight indoors.

The Balanced Spectrum® floor lamp will change the way you see and feel about your living or work spaces. Studies show that sunshine can lift your mood and your energy levels. But as we all know the sun, unfortunately, does not always shine. So to bring the benefits of natural daylight indoors, use the floor lamp that simulates the full spectrum of daylight. You will see with more clarity and enjoyment as this lamp provides sharp visibility for close tasks and reduces eyestrain.

Its 27-watt compact bulb is the equivalent to a 150-watt ordinary light bulb. This makes it perfect for activities such as reading, writing, sewing, needlepoint, and especially for aging eyes.

We've looked at lots of lights, but this one offers the benefit of dual light levels of 27 and 18 watts of power equivalent to 150-and 100-watt incandescent bulbs. This lamp has a flexible gooseneck design for maximum efficiency, with an "Instant On" switch that is flicker-free. The high-tech electronics, user-friendly design, and bulb that lasts 10 times longer than an ordinary bulb make this lamp a must-have.

SAVE $77 over the life of one Balanced Spectrum® bulb![]

A 150-watt incandescent bulb uses $0.013 per hour in energy cost. The Balanced Spectrum® bulb uses an average of 70% less energy which saves you $0.009 per hour. Based on 8,000 hours bulb life, the Balanced Spectrum® bulb will save $72 in energy cost. Plus, because the Balanced Spectrum® bulb lasts 10 times longer than an incandescent bulb priced at an average of $0.50, an additional $5 savings is realized.

pure candidate like Senator George Allen of Virginia or Sam Brownback of Kansas. "The politicized, active part of the Republican base has been stepped on by McCain," says Norquist, citing McCain's opposition to Bush's tax cuts as well as his support for greenhouse gas reductions and his pioneering of contemporary campaign-finance reform. "It'd be hard to imagine we'd be supporting Senator McCain," agrees former Congressman Pat Toomey, president of the Club for Growth.

Some of that criticism can be chalked up to McCain's testy relationship with parts of the GOP's Beltway establishment. Toomey's Club for Growth is being sued by the Federal Election Commission for violating a section of the campaign-finance laws that McCain wrote. Norquist is implicated in McCain's current investigation of how über-lobbyist Jack Abramoff and former Christian Coalition director Ralph Reed milked millions in casino money from unsuspecting Indian tribes. But among social conservatives, McCain's standing is unquestionably precarious. Though he has always voted with the right on abortion, McCain opposed a constitutional amendment to ban gay marriage (on states' rights grounds). He supports expanding federal funding for embryonic stem-cell research, and he helped preserve the filibuster by stalling the "nuclear option" for judicial nominees in the Senate.

Throughout his career, McCain has rarely talked about social issues or paid lip service to the religious right—prompting activists to question his devotion. "Some point to his record on pro-life issues and other questions and they say he really is acceptable," says evangelical leader Paul Weyrich, an influential founder of the modern conservative movement. "Others point to his reaction after the South Carolina primary and feel that underneath he is hostile." The bottom line? "I could not support him for President." Weyrich estimates that 60 percent of social conservative leaders feel the same way. "Social conservatives are the majority of the boots on the ground," says the Rev. Richard Land, a close Bush ally and director of the evangelical Southern Baptist Convention. "If fiscal conservatives and neocons and libertarians want to test that theory, they're in for an electoral debacle."

Recent history, however, isn't nearly that clear. Many religious-right leaders supported fringe candidates like John Ashcroft, Steve Forbes and Alan Keyes before rallying around Bush in 2000. McCain even won the endorsement of evangelical leader Gary Bauer after he promised to appoint only antiabortion judges. "I admire the religious right for the dedication and zeal they put into the political process," McCain told Larry King recently. If he's not making an outright play for the social conservative vote, McCain is certainly trying to blunt their dislike of him—hence his recent positions on intelligent design and gay marriage in Arizona, and his sit-down with Falwell. "McCain doesn't need to get majority support of the social conservatives, just a portion," says John Pitney, a government expert at Claremont McKenna College. "Bush 41 was not a favorite of social conservatives in 1988, but he had enough support to get through."

Over the next year, we're bound to see both sides of McCain. He'll continue to push for noteworthy reforms in the Senate—on torture, lobbying, defense procurement, immigration and other issues—while quietly and not-so-quietly courting elements of the conservative base. Right now, he's offering Republican activists a firm handshake. If it ever becomes a bear hug, akin to his embrace of Bush on the campaign trail in 2004, the John McCain of '08 may look quite different to moderates and independents from the John McCain they think they know now. If the heir to Barry Goldwater emerges as the new face of conservatism, it'll be clear that even straight talkers know how to spin. ■

WHAT HAPPENS WHEN STATES WON'T PAY FOR MEDICAL CARE? JUST ASK TENNESSEANS.

Mismanaged Care

TRUDY LIEBERMAN

Nashville

Every day this summer, a couple of dozen folks staged a sit-in outside the office of Tennessee's Democratic governor, Phil Bredesen, to protest drastic cuts in TennCare, the state's Medicaid program. The protest was "the best thing I've put effort into in my life," says TennCare enrollee Glen Barnhill, a 45-year-old from Nashville who stocked grocery shelves at Kroger before he was rendered a quadriplegic from a gunshot wound to his brain. "If we don't keep fighting," Barnhill says between puffs on his ventilator, "these people are going to die."

TIM ROBINSON

Nearly 200,000 Tennesseans lost their health insurance in July, while 379,000 others now have limited prescription drug coverage and face more benefit cuts this winter. Until this summer, these mostly poor residents had comprehensive health coverage under the boldest, most visionary expansion of Medicaid the United States had ever seen. TennCare covered two groups that have trouble buying insurance in every state: low-income adults whose employers do not provide medical benefits, and people with health conditions that make them uninsurable. At its peak, TennCare covered almost 1.4 million people. By the late 1990s, only 14 percent of the state's population was uninsured—while in states like California and Texas, one-quarter of the population had no insurance.

Today TennCare is $60 million in the red, and Tennessee is just another state struggling to keep poor and terminally ill people

We did not invent time. We simply perfected it with the Steinhausen Classic & Marquise. Old World craftsmanship meets New World technology.

Swiss inventor and architect Ulrich Van-Heusen was a master craftsman who dedicated himself to his trade. He lived in an era when only the wealthy could afford a timepiece. But in 1923, Van-Heusen completed his first automatic calendar watch – only one of seven he ever completed. It displayed not only the time, but also the date, day and month; and it was the first to designate the difference between AM and PM. Van-Heusen named his brand Steinhausen after the region in Switzerland from where his family came. He was steadfast in his belief that wristwatches, not the prevalent pocket watch, would eventually become an item people could not live without. And he was correct! Wristwatches became the must-have item for people of all social strata and the distinguished gentry bought Steinhausen's handcrafted marvels. One that remains today recently fetched $300,000 at auction. The Great Depression almost eliminated handmade watches of this quality.

Reborn After 80 Years

Steinhausen continues its reputation of producing the finest workmanship and classy designs. And now we are pleased to re-introduce the original Steinhausen model with stylish updates. Each movement is painstakingly reproduced by hand from 185 genuine Swiss parts. 35 jeweled stones inside aid movement and accuracy. Then it is so rigorously tested for two weeks that just six percent of movements made end up in a Steinhausen. Swiss automatic movement standards allow for an accuracy of +25/-27 seconds per day. Our Steinhausen watches rate +15/-13 seconds per day, making it more accurate. The Limited Edition Marquise follows the tradition of displaying the day, date, month, year, and moon and stars depicting day and night. The sweeping second-hand movement, brushed and polished stainless steel, and ivory face with Roman numerals is included, too. We have added hand-cut precious sapphire gemstones to the buttons and crown. Included with each Marquise are interchangeable brown and black leather wristbands to match whatever clothes you're wearing. It comes in a handsome felt-lined wood box, along with a card certifying its authenticity.

Satisfaction Guaranteed

Your appreciation of your Marquise or Classic is certain to increase over time. We are so confident that you will receive such an abundance of compliments that your handsome Marquise and Classic comes with a 1 Year warranty. That means that if anything goes wrong with your Marquise or Classic we will replace your watch for free! You just pay for the shipping. Of course, every Steinhausen is backed by our 30 day money back guarantee. If you are not completely satisfied with your Marquise or Classic, return it within 30 days for a full refund and pay only shipping and handling.

Accept No Imitations

Charles Caleb Colton first said "Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery" back in 1820. You may have seen other advertisements for similar looking watches with similar stories. Make no mistake: Steinhausen is the original timepiece found in history books, and highly sought after by Japanese and European collectors. Steinhausens are only found in fine retailers and through Steinhausenonline.com. Don't purchase a watch that looks like a Steinhausen from anywhere else, for you will be buying an imitation. Be the first to wear this remarkable re-issue to the world-famous Steinhausen line.

insured. All across the country, Medicaid offices are reducing benefits, freezing provider payments and kicking people off the rolls. But the outcry has been loudest in Tennessee—both because its program was once the best and because no other state has slashed Medicaid so deeply. Governor Bredesen, who made his fortune in managed care, has refused to meet with the protesters in public, as they've requested. He has also ignored calls for a special legislative session to reconsider the TennCare cutbacks. The state's senior senator, Republican majority leader Bill Frist, has not been helpful either. Before he was elected to the Senate, Frist championed TennCare; now he says the program's troubles are a state matter, and he can't get involved. "It's ironic how Senator Frist stands up for Terri Schiavo," says protest organizer Lori Smith, "yet denies medical care to his own people in Tennessee."

The ironies don't stop there. At its conception in 1994, TennCare looked like a national model for expanding Medicaid coverage. Born in the days of Lyndon Johnson's Great Society as a way of covering the poor, Medicaid has evolved into the nation's largest health insurance plan, now covering 53 million Americans. The federal government matches the money a state puts up for the program, but states have broad latitude to add benefits and enroll more residents as they see fit. As President Clinton's plan for national healthcare collapsed and the number of uninsured continued to mount in the mid-1990s, Tennessee leaders came up with a creative solution: Redirect money that hospitals were already spending on care for the uninsured into a unified program that would cover more people and better control costs.

'It's ironic how Senator Frist stands up for Terri Schiavo yet denies medical care to his own people in Tennessee.'

Crafted at a time when policy experts believed managed care was the antidote to rising medical costs, TennCare relied on HMOs to provide benefits. The theory was that if the state did managed care right, it could cover a good chunk of the uninsured. But TennCare's HMOs did little managing. First Health Services Corporation, owned by a company that Bredesen founded, failed to implement federal requirements designed to insure that drugs are prescribed properly—but never lost its contract with the state. The state allowed two HMOs to "cover" residents even though they were undercapitalized and could not pay providers for care their patients received. Eventually the state assumed the risk and responsibility for all patients' medical expenses. But Tennessee continued to pay the managed care companies handsome fees—simply for processing claims. For the HMOs it was a sweet deal: fees but no risk.

Former Governor Don Sundquist, a Republican, sped along TennCare's slide into insolvency. In 2002, during routine Medicaid renegotiations with the federal government, Sundquist agreed to give back some federal matching funds—even though the program was already running into financial trouble and starting to trim residents from its rolls. Until 2002 anyone who was uninsurable could join TennCare, regardless of income, in return for paying premiums; those with higher incomes paid more. That changed dramatically in 2002, when the state closed TennCare to anyone with an income above poverty level—and stopped enrolling people who could not buy insurance because of bad health.

That same year, Tennessee voters rejected an income tax that could have helped pay for TennCare. The governor has refused to support subsequent proposals for new sales taxes on alcohol and tobacco. "There's no political appetite in this state for new taxes," says TennCare spokesperson Michael Drescher.

If Tennessee can't, or won't, pay for medical care, it's fair to ask a stark question: How can the thousands of people thrown off the rolls—including heart-transplant patients and people with lupus, diabetes and severe mental illness—survive?

Kathy Chamberlain would like to know. The 46-year-old, who used to play acoustic guitar at Nashville blues cafes, fights back tears as she describes an incessant ringing in her ears, the result of slipping on a puddle of water in a local supermarket and hitting her head on the floor. She has never been the same since, and she relied on TennCare to pay for her treatment and for antidepressants—drugs she didn't need before the accident. Those drugs now cost $639 a month; a discount card from the state, sent to TennCare enrollees who lost their coverage, pares her bill to $463. Chamberlain still can't afford it; she has to use her mother's credit card to buy her prescriptions.

"I have never encountered anything that I could not change until this," Chamberlain says. Even if she could afford to buy insurance, her illness would prevent her from getting a policy. She can't change that, either.

The thousands of Chamberlain's fellow Tennesseans who have been kicked off TennCare haven't seen the worst of it yet. The Center on Budget and Policy Priorities estimates that the massive loss of TennCare coverage will lead to an increase in uncompensated care that will cost "safety net" hospitals and clinics in Tennessee as much as $450 million annually. Waiting lists will grow longer, and the lost revenue could force some hospitals and clinics to close. Mary Bufwack, director of Nashville's United Neighborhood Health Services, says her budget is not big enough to serve all the newly uninsured who are showing up at her five clinics for the indigent. Forty percent of UNHS's budget had been coming from TennCare payments.

Some former TennCare patients are turning to drug-company assistance programs for help, but the wait for free drugs is six to eight weeks—if their incomes are low enough to make them eligible. Others are begging doctors for medication samples left by sales representatives. Hickman County healthcare activist Cindy Clark says doctors are running out of free samples. "They are overwhelmed," says Clark. "We see a disaster taking place in this state."

A disaster indeed. The Center for Health Services Research at the University of Tennessee-Memphis estimates that TennCare cuts will result in the deaths of as many as 3,311 people over the next fifteen years. Fifty-two-year-old Diane Wood can only hope she's not one of the casualties. Wood, who lives in the rolling hills east of Nashville, calls herself "fortunate" to have breast cancer; so far, women with breast or cervical cancer have been allowed to stay on TennCare. But this past summer's remake of TennCare instituted severe caps on prescription drugs, limiting recipients to two brand-name prescriptions and three generics per month. That has forced Wood to choose which of her other illnesses—diabetes, osteoporosis, failing kidneys—she will treat. Wood, who earns $50 a week baby-sitting her grandchildren, has decided to treat her cancer and kidney disease and say "to heck with" the diabetes and osteoporosis.

"Caps are the crudest cost-containment policy I can ever imagine," says Dr. Stephen Soumerai, a professor and drug-policy researcher at Harvard University Medical School. "What caps do is completely counter to everything we know based on research in the field." They certainly don't save money in the long run. When people like Wood can't get the medicines they need, they get sicker and end up in nursing homes and other institutions where the cost of care is greater than the savings generated by the caps.

A growing number of Tennessee doctors, particularly specialists and those in rural areas, refuse to take TennCare patients. Doctors grumbled from the start that the state paid them too little to treat these patients. Like doctors everywhere, they prefer to serve those insured by commercial carriers like Aetna or Blue Cross, which pay more than Medicaid. In a recent survey of its members, the Tennessee Medical Association found that although 88 percent said they still work with TennCare, 20 percent are not taking new TennCare patients and 27 percent are considering ending their contract with the program. The main reason, says association senior vice president Russell Miller, is that cuts in benefits are compromising the care doctors want to give—and increasing the legal liability they are exposed to.

TennCare cuts will result in the deaths of as many as 3,311 Tennesseans over the next fifteen years.

Doctors who still accept TennCare patients know what's going to happen. "We kept a lot of people from dying for over a decade," Nashville gastroenterologist Robert Herring said recently, after a long day of performing colonoscopies on people about to lose their coverage. "It's a shame we couldn't provide a bridge until we have national health insurance," the doctor said. "Now I am going to cry."

Outside of Tennessee, the most radical response to the nationwide Medicaid crisis has unfolded in Missouri. Earlier this year legislators axed 104,213 people from Missouri Medicaid—and ordered the state to get out of the Medicaid business altogether by 2008. Where Missouri was once one of the dozen states with the lowest number of uninsured residents, it will become one of the dozen with the highest number after all its cuts take effect. Already, the state has stopped paying for feeding tubes and nutritional formula for thousands of residents with brain damage and other disabilities. It won't pay for other lifesaving items, like breathing machines, either.

In October, the federal government gave Florida permission to radically transform its Medicaid program into a "defined contribution" arrangement instead of an entitlement. Recipients will get a set amount of money for medical care, and private insurers will make many of the decisions about coverage—with no public scrutiny. If Florida's plan becomes the model for other states, as some healthcare activists fear, it will mean that poor people will get less and less medical care over time.

While the states chop benefits, the federal government is also aiming to cut its share of Medicaid funding. Congress has ordered a commission—chaired by former Tennessee Governor Sundquist—to recommend ways to slash $10 billion from the federal government's Medicaid budget. While the cuts will devastate thousands of Americans, they will do little to address the real financial problem facing the US healthcare system: how to create a new revenue source that will provide coverage for everyone and spread the risk of illness, much the way Social Security spreads the risk of citizens having no income in old age.

While Tennessee once aspired to be a leader in expanding health coverage, its current governor wants to make it the national model for retrenching and privatizing Medicaid. A confidential document called "Back to Medicaid Kick-off," prepared by TennCare's deputy commissioner and the state commissioner of finance and administration, not only outlines steps for gutting TennCare but also vows to "set the stage to allow the Governor a broader healthcare reform platform." In the view of Michele Johnson, a lawyer with the Tennessee Justice Center, Bredesen's "political future depends on transforming Medicaid into a market-based system, and he believes he can ride the market-based approach to the national stage."

Bob Corney, the governor's communications director, says the governor has no plans to run for any office except his current one; Bredesen will seek re-election next year. But the governor's stand on Medicaid has already brought him national attention. At a University of North Carolina "emerging issues" forum in February, and again in June at the National Press Club in Washington, Bredesen gave his vision for what he called Medicaid 2.0. The governor called for all Medicaid recipients to pay "something"—i.e., higher deductibles and co-payments. Medicaid, Bredesen declared, should pay only for treatments that work and for "things that are important."

While few experts would quarrel with paying only for "what works," it's far easier said than done. No drug company or medical-technology firm peddling ineffective treatments will give up its business without a political fight. And shifting costs to those who can't pay for treatment only increases long-term costs to the state.

Bredesen has steadfastly refused to seek new money to insure those who are being booted off TennCare. Indeed, his staff's "Back to Medicaid Kick-off" document sets a goal of stifling any alternative proposals for new revenue. Bredesen has also declined to dip into the state's $200 million surplus funds. "You can't revenue your way out of this problem," insists TennCare spokesperson Drescher.

However noble the TennCare experiment was, it ultimately demonstrated the futility of states' efforts to solve a national problem by themselves. In late July, protesters at the state capitol hauled a bell from the Edgehill United Methodist Church onto Nashville's legislative plaza. They rang it to represent every Tennessean affected by the TennCare cuts. It took four days to complete the roll call.

The tolling of that bell is the real lesson of TennCare for people all across America: The bell tolls for thee. ■

What lies behind the scientific breakthroughs of the last 500 years?

Find out with The Joy of Science, an exciting recorded course from The Teaching Company

English novelist and scientist C. P. Snow classed certain scientific ideas with the works of Shakespeare as something every educated person should know. One such idea, according to Snow, was the second law of thermodynamics, which deals with the diffusion of heat and has many profound consequences.

He might well have added Newton's laws, the periodic table of elements, the double-helix structure of DNA, and scores of other masterpieces of scientific discovery.

Now, Professor Robert M. Hazen introduces these and other great ideas in 60 lectures that explore the fundamental discoveries and principles of all of the physical and biological sciences—physics, genetics, biology, astronomy, chemistry, meteorology, thermodynamics, and more.

A Passion for Teaching and Science

Professor Hazen is an apostle of science education for non-scientists, and he has few peers at rendering the most complex ideas simple, without being simplistic.

"I have a passion as a teacher," he says, "and that passion is to share with you the joy of science, the astonishing discoveries, the mind-bending insights, and the transforming applications of science as well."

A research scientist, professor, and advisor to public television's NOVA science series, Dr. Hazen helped draft the National Science Education Standards (National Academy of Sciences, 1997). These Standards represent a consensus among thousands of scientists and educators regarding the most effective approaches for teaching and learning about science.

These lectures have been specifically designed to introduce and review all of the scientific principles that are included in the Content Standards portion of the National Science Education Standards.

The result is a comprehensive and integrated introduction to all of science. By devoting just 30 minutes a day, you can complete this entire course in two months and discover an enhanced understanding of the physical world that will be a source of endless wonder and intellectual joy.

A Special Learning Opportunity

This course offers a special learning opportunity because:

- It steers clear of the jargon and mathematical abstractions that so often bedevil science education.
- It features an integrated approach that allows you as a learner to transcend artificial disciplinary boundaries in order to gain a panoramic view of the whole scientific enterprise in all its breathtaking scope.

The key to these achievements is Professor Hazen's insight that only a course organized around the common principles of scientific inquiry can put science in its proper light as a unique way of knowing.

Four Reasons to Become Scientifically Literate

Dr. Hazen cites four reasons why you should strive to become scientifically literate:

- Scientific literacy helps you as a consumer make informed decisions—about health care, diet, nutrition, exercise, environmental issues, and the plethora of technological choices that we all face.
- Many of today's jobs depend directly or indirectly on science as well as on technologies that are developed from scientific discoveries.

- Scientific literacy helps you provide your children with a firm foundation as they study science in school.
- Learning about science allows you to share the joy of humanity's greatest ongoing adventure of discovery and exploration.

What You'll Learn

Highlights of Part I (Lectures 1–12):

Dr. Hazen begins by explaining the four-step cycle that defines the "scientific method" of knowing. He introduces you to five pivotal figures in early-modern science: Nicolas Copernicus, Tycho Brahe, Johannes Kepler, Galileo Galilei, and Isaac Newton. Astoundingly, during a single rural sojourn in 1665–66, Newton discovered calculus, many of the basic laws of optics, the three laws of motion, and the law of gravity. Newton's discoveries unified the supposedly separate domains of terrestrial and celestial motions.

Highlights of Part II (Lectures 13–24):

Dr. Hazen introduces you to H. C. Oersted, the little-known figure who paved the way for a revolution in technology with his finding that electricity can produce a magnetic field. Out of this discovery came the electromagnet, the telegraph, the telephone, the electric motor, the generator, and many other inventions. You will also learn how James Clerk Maxwell offered the first mathematically rigorous description of the close connection between electricity and magnetism—and how Einstein, pondering a paradox that arose from Maxwell's equations, proposed and explored the principle of relativity.

Dr. Hazen shifts the focus of his lectures to the nature of matter, paying particular attention to atoms and quantum mechanics. He explains the chemical bonding of atoms, the different states of matter, and the principal force of change in the world of matter: chemical reactions.

Highlights of Part III (Lectures 25–36):

Dr. Hazen then turns to the explanation of how specific physical systems work. Such systems manifest themselves in the properties of materials, as well as in the characteristics of atomic isotopes and their energy-producing nuclear reactions. You will learn about astronomy, the Big Bang theory, the solar system, and today's burgeoning field of extra-solar planetary systems.

Highlights of Part IV (Lectures 37–48):

Dr. Hazen devotes lectures to the constant recycling of Earth's materials—water, air, and rock. He explores the question, "What is life?" You'll examine life's molecular building blocks: carbohydrates, lipids, proteins, and nucleic acids. You'll learn how biological information is passed from parents to offspring, processes first quantified by the Czechoslovakian monk Gregor Mendel.

Highlights of Part V (Lectures 49–60):

Mendel's discoveries lead Dr. Hazen to focus on the great unifying biological principles of genetics, evolution, and ecosystems. He argues that no scientific discovery of the 20th century has had a greater impact than the deciphering of the genetic code, embedded in the double-helix structure of DNA, first described in 1952 by James Watson and Francis Crick. Dr. Hazen goes on to address troubling ethical questions raised by genetic engineering. He examines both the chemical and biological evolution of life before delving into the interdependent communities of species and their physical environments known as ecosystems.

Dr. Hazen also raises questions about claims that science is approaching its end—that all there is of significance to be learned about the natural world will soon be known.

About Your Professor

Professor Robert M. Hazen (Ph.D., Harvard University) is Clarence Robinson Professor of Earth Science at George Mason University and a research scientist at the Carnegie Institution of Washington. Among his many awards is the Educational Press Association Award. His 15 books include the best-selling Science Matters: Achieving Scientific Literacy. He has written over 220 scholarly articles.

About The Teaching Company

We review hundreds of top-rated professors from America's best colleges and universities each year. From this extraordinary group, we choose only those rated highest by panels of our customers. Fewer than 10% of these world-class scholar-teachers are selected to make The Great Courses. We've been doing this since 1990, producing 2,000 hours of material in literature, philosophy, history, fine arts, and the sciences. If a course is ever less than completely satisfying, you may exchange it for another or we will refund your money promptly.

About Our Sale Price Policy

Why is the sale price for this course so much lower than its standard price? Every course we make goes on sale at least once a year. Producing large quantities of only the sale courses keeps costs down and allows us to pass the savings on to you. This approach also enables us to fill your order immediately: 99% of all orders placed by 2:00 p.m. eastern time ship that same day. Order before December 17, 2005 to receive these savings.

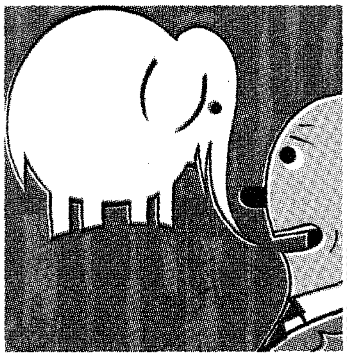
SKEWERING THE RIGHT WING'S LINGUISTIC DECEPTIONS.

Dictionary of Republicanisms

KATRINA VANDEN HEUVEL



TIM ROBINSON

Over the past few decades, the radical right has engaged in a well-funded, self-conscious program of Orwellian doublespeak, transforming the American political discourse to suit its ends. Think tanks like the Cato Institute routinely market phrases for their political resonance, like "personal" vs. "private" accounts. Frank Luntz, the Republican pollster, lexicographer and MSNBC pundit who combines Madison Avenue techniques with K Street connections, sends out regular missives informing Republican operatives and politicians on how to spin conservative policy proposals. (He was on The Daily Show demonstrating his talents, defining "manipulation" as "explanation and education.") Paul Wolfowitz admitted to Vanity Fair that "weapons of mass destruction" was agreed upon as the reason to go to war with Iraq because it was the most salable rationale. And we all know how that turned out.

Before we can win the great battle of ideas, we must debunk the right's political discourse, a veritable code of encrypted language that twists common usage to deceive the public for the Republicans' purposes. The key to their linguistic strategy is to use words that sound moderate to us but mean something completely different to them. Their tactics range from the childish use of antonyms ("clean" = "dirty") to the pseudo-academic use of prefixes ("neo" is a favorite) to the pernicious and very expensive rebranding of traditional labels ("liberal" as an insult).

We decided we needed to break the code by building a Republican dictionary. Skewer their deceptions with the fine-tipped sword of satire. Lies melt away in the face of mockery.

Unlike Republicans, who rely on rich old cranks and intellectuals-for-hire to do their dirty work, we opened up the process to the people. For six months, thenation.com accepted suggestions from everyone who wanted to participate. The result was an overwhelming grassroots groundswell of hilarious submissions from citizens who are mad as hell and aren't going to take it anymore. Thousands of definitions were entered from all over the country, forty-four states in all, along with Puerto Rico and Washington, DC. (We even received a few from outraged Canadians, Australians and Brits.)

As momentum for the project grew, friends and allies joined the effort. TomDispatch.com asked its readers and writers to submit their own definitions. Reviewing the submissions from our website, we found that certain trends became apparent. "Compassionate conservative" and "ownership society" were the most popular targets. "No Child Left Behind" was the most common riff. The disaster in Iraq was the subject of the most outrage. The results have been compiled in a new book, Dictionary of Republicanisms (Nation Books). Here are some of my favorites. I hope they inspire you to action, to take back this great nation from those who are doing it such harm.

abstinence-only sex education n. Ignorance-only sex education [Wayne Martorelli, Lawrenceville, NJ].

alternative energy sources n. New locations to drill for gas and oil [Peter Scholz, Fort Collins, Colo.].

bankruptcy n. A punishable crime when committed by poor people but not corporations [Beth Thielen, Studio City, Calif.].

"burning bush" n. A biblical allusion to the response of the President of the United States when asked a question by a journalist who has not been paid to inquire [Bill Moyers, New York, NY].

Cheney, Dick n. The greater of two evils [Jacob McCullar, Austin, Tex.].

China n. See Wal-Mart [Rebecca Solnit, San Francisco, Calif.].

class warfare n. Any attempt to raise the minimum wage [Don Zweir, Grayslake, Ill.].

climate change n. The blessed day when the blue states are swallowed by the oceans [Ann Klopp, Princeton, NJ].

compassionate conservatism n. Poignant concern for the very wealthy [Lawrence Sandek, Twin Peaks, Calif.].

creationism n. Pseudoscience that claims George W. Bush's resemblance to a chimpanzee is totally coincidental [Brian Sweeney, Providence, RI].

DeLay, Tom n. 1. Past tense of De Lie [Rick Rodstrom, Los Angeles, Calif.]. 2. Patronage saint [Andrew Magni, Nonatum, Mass.].

democracy n. A product so extensively exported that the domestic supply is depleted [Michael Schwartz, unknown].

dittohead n. An Oxy(contin)moron [Zydeco Boudreaux, Gretna, La.].

energy independence n. The caribou witness relocation program [Justin Rezzonico, Keene, Ohio].

extraordinary rendition n. Outsourcing torture [Milton Feldon, Laguna Woods, Calif.].

faith n. The stubborn belief that God approves of Republican moral values despite the preponderance of textual evidence to the contrary [Matthew Polly, Topeka, Kans.].

Fox News fict. Faux news [Justin Rezzonico, Keene, Ohio].

free markets n. Halliburton no-bid contracts at taxpayer expense [Sean O'Brian, Chicago, Ill.].

girly men n. Males who do not grope women inappropriately [Nick Gill, Newton, Mass.].

God n. Senior presidential adviser [Martin Richard, Belgrade, Mont.].

growth n. 1. The justification for tax cuts for the rich. 2. What happens to the national debt when Republicans cut taxes on the rich [Matthew Polly, Topeka, Kans.].

habeas corpus n. Archaic. (Lat.) Legal term no longer in use (See Patriot Act) [Josh Wanstreet, Nutter Fort, WV].

healthy forest n. No tree left behind [Dan McWilliams, Santa Barbara, Calif.].

homelandism n. A neologism for love of the Homeland Security State, as in "My Homeland, 'tis of thee, sweet security state of liberty..." [Tom Engelhardt, New York, NY].

honesty n. Lies told in simple declarative sentences—e.g., "Freedom is on the march" [Katrina vanden Heuvel, New York, NY].

House of Representatives n. Exclusive club; entry fee $1 million to $5 million (See Senate) [Adam Hochschild, San Francisco, Calif.].

laziness n. When the poor are not working [Justin Rezzonico, Keene, Ohio].

leisure time n. When the wealthy are not working [Justin Rezzonico, Keene, Ohio].

liberal(s) n. Followers of the Antichrist [Ann Wegher, Montello, Wisc.].

Miller, Zell n. The man who shot and killed Alexander Hamilton after a particularly tough interview on Hardball [Drew Dillion, Arlington, Va.].

neoconservatives n. Nerds with Napoleonic complexes [Matthew Polly, Topeka, Kans.].

9/11 n. Tragedy used to justify any administrative policy, especially if unrelated (See Deficit, Iraq War) [Dan Mason, Durham, NH].

No Child Left Behind riff. 1. v. There are always jobs in the military [Ann Klopp, Princeton, NJ]. 2. n. The rapture [Samantha Hess, Cottonwood, Ariz.]. ownership society n. A civilization where 1 percent of the population controls 90 percent of the wealth [Michael Albert, Piscataway, NJ].

Patriot Act n. 1. The pre-emptive strike on American freedoms to prevent the terrorists from destroying them first. 2. The elimination of one of the reasons why they hate us [Michael Thomas, Socorro, NM].

pro-life adj. Valuing human life up until birth [Kevin Weaver, San Francisco, Calif.].

Senate n. Exclusive club; entry fee $10 million to $30 million [Adam Hochschild, San Francisco, Calif.].

simplify v. To cut the taxes of Republican donors [Katrina vanden Heuvel, New York, NY].

staying the course interj. Slang. Saying and doing the same stupid thing over and over, regardless of the result [Suzanne Smith, Ann Arbor, Mich.].

stuff happens interj. Slang. Donald Rumsfeld as master historian [Sheila and Chalmers Johnson, San Diego, Calif.].

voter fraud n. A significant minority turnout [Sue Bazy, Philadelphia, Pa.].

Wal-Mart n. The nation-state, future tense [Rebecca Solnit, San Francisco, Calif.].

water n. Arsenic storage device [Joy Losee, Gainesville, Ga.].

woman n. 1. Person who can be trusted to bear a child but can't be trusted to decide whether or not she wishes to have the child. 2. Person who must have all decisions regarding her reproductive functions made by men with whom she wouldn't want to have sex in the first place [Denise Clay, Philadelphia, Pa.]. ■

Memorial and Honorary Gifts to

The Nation.

Memorial and honorary gifts to The Nation are a meaningful way of honoring someone (a recent graduate, for example) or expressing your sympathy in times of loss. The Nation Legacy Group will see that an elegant card acknowledging your gift, supporting the work and future of The Nation, is sent according to your wishes. Simply send us your gift, the name of the person you wish to honor or memorialize, and the name and address of the person to whom the gift card should be sent. By making such a gift, you help ensure that both the principles we stand for, and the forum in which we fight for them, will be around for generations to come.

mother's father, an entrepreneur who made lots of money from his own drugstores, raised my mother in a celebrity-type atmosphere in a northwestern suburb of Atlanta. My father, on the other hand, worked graveyard shifts to pay for his college and law school. He became one of the most influential lawyers in our state.

I have always been proud of my Southern roots. Although I've lived in many other areas, I always felt a connection to the South. However, I swore I would never return to live in my hometown. One reason is the conservative Republicanism that not only took over my town like kudzu but also twined its way around my state, now strangling in its own brand of GOP.

I was raised in a liberal-thinking household. Dinner table talks concentrated on the world and how we could help those who were less fortunate. Racial discrimination was still a huge problem in the South, but my parents never tolerated any of "that" talk. My mother was asked to be a guest speaker at our schools, where my siblings and I debated our peers, standing up for our parents' way of thinking. When my church youth group began debates and I agreed with my parents' thinking—that everyone, no matter what sex, race, color or ethnicity, is equal—I discovered, quickly, what discrimination felt like. I did not like it one bit, especially as a teenager!

So, I did not want to return to my hometown and raise children. But things happened, and I ended up back in my same northwest suburb of Atlanta. Believing that the way to make a difference is to work with kids, I went into school counseling. Now politics have invaded even this precious hope I held on to. The No Child Left Behind Act has driven true counseling to its death. Discouraged and frustrated, I resigned from school counseling, betrayed by my government. How can we help our youth? How can we raise them to carry on the democracy that the United States has symbolized for years? Am I the only one who believes that good, solid, strongly supported school counseling programs—not metal detectors and armed police—are what we need in schools?

I am so depressed by these thoughts and feel truly beaten down. I have fought battles with myself, saying that Georgia isn't full of uneducated rednecks, that Georgians are for the most part forward thinking, nondiscriminating people. But so many times I want to throw my hands up and say, "I give up." Then my don't-give-up attitude says, "Don't let them win."

The last straw was Hurricane Katrina. I was shocked and appalled by the horrible things I heard, like, "Now we're going to have to pay for all those black people" and "This is all their fault for not leaving when they were told." My Japanese friend told me her mother called from Japan to ask her what country New Orleans was in. She's an educated woman, but she thought New Orleans must be in a Third World country because no one was helping to rescue those people.

What does this have to do with The Nation? A lot. I want to thank you for giving me hope. When my Nation shines in my mailbox, I breathe a sigh of relief. It's truly "comfort food" for me. I just wish I could make it mandatory reading for all. My hope pops up over and over as I read, realizing that yes there really are people out there who think like me! And please know that there are people in the South like me, who think like you.

DAY PARKER POHKAMP

NOT U.S. GRANT, RONALD REAGAN

In "Faith and Fraud" [Nov. 21], Jonathan Schell repeats the statement—cited everywhere from the New York Times to the Guardian to CNN to the Daily Kos and elsewhere—that the Scooter Libby indictment is the first to reach into the White House since 1875. In fact, Raymond Donovan, President Reagan's Labor Secretary, was indicted for grand larceny in 1984.

THE NATION NEEDS YOUR FINANCIAL SUPPORT TODAY!

To your right is a special envelope with an invitation for all Nation readers to join

The Nation Associates.

Sign up today and see your name on next year's honor roll.

HERE'S WHY!

NATION ASSOCIATES

Publication of The Nation is not possible without the extra support of its readers. Nation Associates make our award-winning investigative reporting possible, and help underwrite our hard-hitting political commentary from Eric Alterman, Katha Pollitt, Alexander Cockburn, William Greider, Patricia J. Williams and many others.

All Associates, regardless of the size of the gift, receive our biannual newsletter (a behind-the-scenes look at The Nation), our special book discounts, help in locating or starting a discussion group in your area and invitations to get-togethers of Nation writers, editors and staff. Many Associates are especially generous and become Activists, Mentors and Loyalists.

ACTIVIST ($75)

Activists make possible ActNow, our web-based action page at www.thenation.com/actnow. ActNow puts readers in touch with projects and campaigns that offer creative ways to advance a compassionate, progressive agenda. When ActNow is updated, we'll e-mail you (or someone you designate) an exclusive Activist Alert.

MENTOR ($250)

Mentors support the education programs of The Nation. We'll donate The Nation Digital Archive—the magazine's complete web-based back file—to a needy high school library. Or we'll provide a high school or college classroom with subscriptions, a weekly Teaching Guide and themed Archive Packs through our Nation Classroom Program.

LOYALIST ($500)

Loyalists receive, in addition to our profuse thanks, an annual subscription to The Nation; a free selection of books by Nation editors and writers that we'll ship at year's end; and the highest recognition once a year in the pages of The Nation itself.

THE NATION ASSOCIATES HONOR ROLL 2005-2006

EACH YEAR, AN EXTRAORDINARY GROUP OF INDIVIDUALS MAKES CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE WORK OF THE NATION THROUGH THE NATION ASSOCIATES. BECAUSE THE COST OF PRODUCING THE NATION IS FAR GREATER THAN ITS REVENUES, WE LITERALLY COULD NOT CONTINUE TO TURN OUT THIS MAGAZINE WITHOUT THEIR COMMITMENT AND GENEROSITY. TO EACH OF YOU LISTED BELOW, OUR SINCEREST—AND WARMEST—THANKS.

STEFAN COLLINI

By Perry Anderson.
Verso. 398 pp. $35.

"It should be a matter of honour on the Left to write at least as well...as its adversaries." Such a conviction, expressed with an almost antique downrightness of tone, is not common in writing today, and neither, perhaps, is the confident division of the world into "the Left" and "its adversaries." Nor, for that matter, has the sentiment generally been well regarded by much of the left itself, which has often been wary of style and stylishness, suspecting such genteel notions of cloaking confusions and distractions that serve the interests of the established order. There is, therefore, something doubly bracing about encountering this sentence in the editorial that in 2000 launched a new series of New Left Review, a journal at the forefront of engaged intellectual work on the left since its inception in 1960 but one that in its early decades was scarcely a byword for good writing. This setting makes the choice of idiom all the more arresting: a "matter of honour," no less! We are clearly in the presence of a distinctive voice, one not to be trifled with.

The voice in question is that of Perry Anderson, who has been intimately involved with the direction of New Left Review throughout most of the forty-five years of its existence and who has long been acknowledged as a formidable and accomplished intellectual figure in his own right—comparative historian, social theorist, political analyst. Traditionally, the chief obstacles to good writing on the left have been located in a certain remorselessness of political and theoretical zeal, an unlovely union of overabstraction and the doctrinaire exposition of a party line. Anderson has never conceded this charge; good writing in his view can take various forms and should not be incompatible with rigorous theorizing or trenchant political judgment. But in that same editorial he identified a new threat: He remarked upon "the widespread migration of intellectuals of the Left into institutions of higher learning" over recent years and immediately registered a warning of the "tares" this move has brought with it, above all "standards of writing that would have left Marx or Morris speechless." In his new collection of essays, Spectrum, Anderson is equally unsparing in itemizing the "baneful effects" of academia: "peer-group fixation, index-of-citations mania, gratuitous apparatuses, pretentious jargons, guild conceit."

Taking a deliberate, at times almost haughty, distance from these disfiguring fashions, Spectrum reveals a constant responsiveness to matters of style. The conservative philosopher Michael Oakeshott is roundly denounced for various political and logical failings, but at his best, Anderson acknowledges, "his writing...can rise to a lyrical beauty." The arguments of a book on the British Constitution by Tory political commentator Ferdinand Mount are utterly dismantled, but not without registering the author's "cool prose" and "light touch." Similarly, Anderson judges that the first part of Interesting Times, the autobiography of British Marxist historian Eric Hobsbawm, is "the finest piece of writing this famously accomplished stylist has ever produced," and he praises Hobsbawm's tetralogy of works on the making of the modern world from 1789 to 1991 for "a style of remarkable clarity and energy, whose signature is the sudden bolt of metaphoric electricity across the even surface of cool, pungent argument" (thus displaying his own credentials in the matter as well).

Brooding on this recurrent feature of Anderson's recent writing, I recalled the adage "Writing well is the best revenge." Insofar as this applies in his case, one might say that it is "revenge" on history. In the 1960s and '70s, it was possible for Anderson and his collaborators to believe that history was on their side, that the proper union of intellectual labor and working-class militancy would help bring about the socialist supersession of capitalism. Marx provided the main theoretical framework, Trotsky much of the political inspiration; among more immediate seniors, Isaac Deutscher and Ernest Mandel were stars to steer by. Anderson's writing of those decades, much of it published in New Left Review, did not feel the need to make many concessions to those who were uninitiated theoretically or unsympathetic politically. The task was too urgent, the stakes too high, and in any case the "bourgeois" media were too complicit with capitalism and its political outriders. Anderson wrote several brilliant essays during these years (as well as two major works of comparative history, Passages From Antiquity to Feudalism and Lineages of the Absolutist State), but though their brilliance may be undimmed even at this distance, one cannot help noticing how the whiff of sectarianism, of laying down the "correct" line, now hangs about some of these articles like stale cigarette smoke.

The 1980s and '90s administered a series of painful shocks to the milieu to which Anderson's early writing had been addressed. He appears to have undergone something of a political or intellectual crisis in the mid-'80s, leading him not just to reassess the prospects for the left in a world dominated by neoliberalism but also, one may infer, to reconsider the function of his own writing. Displaying an enviable resilience and capacity for self-renewal, he has committed himself to the ideal of "uncompromising realism," however politically discouraging the findings of such realism may be. Whether as a result of this recasting or because of changes in the public sphere of Western societies—or for quite other literary, personal or material reasons—Anderson, always a powerful analyst and coruscating polemicist, has emerged in the past fifteen years or more as one of the leading intellectual essayists of our time, read and admired far beyond any sectarian confines. In 1992 Verso (which he had helped to found as the publishing arm of NLR) issued two collections of his essays: English Questions brought together several already celebrated longer articles on the "deviant" character of British history and politics, viewed from within a particular European Marxist optic, while Zone of Engagement collected pieces mostly focused on recent and contemporary theorists and political commentators. Several of the essays in the latter volume, in particular, are models of serious intellectual appraisal: deeply informed, ranging, severe. There are few writers whose name on the cover of a periodical constitutes an irresistible incitement to find out what they have to say—on whatever the subject may be—but I know I am not alone in putting Anderson in that very select company.

Spectrum is a collection of fifteen essays, all but one of them previously published, the great majority in The London Review of Books or New Left Review. The contents are arranged in a progression across the political spectrum: from "the Intransigent Right" of Michael Oakeshott, Leo Strauss, Carl Schmitt and Friedrich von Hayek; through the reformist conservatism of Ferdinand Mount and the anti-communism of Timothy Garton Ash; to "the Adjustable Centre" of John Rawls, Norberto Bobbio and Jürgen Habermas; and on to "the Vanquished Left" of E.P. Thompson, Robert Brenner, Sebastiano Timpanaro and Eric Hobsbawm (plus two slightly more marginal pieces on Göran Therborn and Gabriel García Márquez, both of which appeared originally in these pages). Although Anderson is on record as regarding decolonization and the women's movement as the most significant developments in human emancipation in the past half-century, his subjects in this collection are all European or North American (García Márquez aside) and all male.

Two further, less easily classifiable pieces are included in an appendix. The first is a sympathetic assessment of The London Review of Books from its inception in 1979 to 1996 (the piece first appeared as the introduction to an anthology from the journal published in that year). The other is a remarkable essay, arresting and haunting, on Anderson's father and the Chinese Maritime Customs Service for which he worked, one of the most improbable organizations thrown up by the uneven history of imperialism, largely staffed by well-educated Westerners but answerable to the Chinese government. This piece has some of the satisfactions of amateur family history, delving into Anderson's Anglo-Irish military background, but it is bolstered by his habitual command of the forces, both proximate and distant, at work in shaping world events and is inflected in places by tones not usually associated with his writing—delicate, painterly, compassionate.

The chief impression left by the best essays in this volume is one of extraordinary intellectual power. The analysis of the theoretical and empirical claims made in the work of its subjects is both dazzling and unyielding: These are "critiques" in the full sense of that term in its original German philosophical usage: reconstructions of the internal logic of ideas, deductions of the intellectual and sociological conditions of their possibility, withering exposures of their inconsistencies and omissions. His range is proverbial: It hardly seems fair that one man could move with such ease through the history of so many periods and regions or through so many different kinds of writing. The word "magisterial" is overworked, often as a slack synonym for "impressive," yet if one attends to its definition—"having the bearing of a master, invested with authority"—then the aura of omnicompetent grandeur about Anderson's writing makes the term irresistible. That the contemporary left should possess such a voice, one in which radical political aspirations are blotted neither by phony populism nor by rebarbative academicism, is important and heartening. Anderson remains an inspiring example of thinking in the world, about the world and for the world.

Yet to what readership, so much of the world having changed, does Anderson now address himself, and from what vantage point, so many of the old doctrinal certainties having shriveled, does he now write? One of the phrases that has been used to identify the characteristic perspective of Anderson's recent work is "Olympian universalism." The noun is obviously apt: Not only is Anderson a staunch adherent of the Enlightenment tradition of unfettered rational analysis; he is a universalist in the geographical as well as philosophical sense, attending impartially to developments in all parts of the world. He is the least parochial of writers—apart, I feel bound to say, from his constant (and, in its way, parochial) dismissiveness of English culture as incorrigibly sterile and hidebound.

But "Olympian," too, does capture something that may be becoming more and more characteristic of his writing voice. One index of this that may at first appear no more than an idiosyncratic indulgence comes to strike the reader as a systematic self-distancing from the popular and demotic, and that is Anderson's deliberate deployment of a recondite, but nontechnical, vocabulary. Where else in contemporary writing is one likely to come across the following terms, culled almost at random from among these essays: magma, taxative, lustration, censitary, carmagnoles, scoria, galumphery, alembicated, exaptation, caducity, postilla, plus near archaisms such as contemn, glozing and moiety, as well as neuralgic (used to characterize an argument) and brigade (used as a verb, a particular favorite of Anderson's)? In addition, the extent to which his prose is sprinkled with words and phrases taken from other languages puts him in company with older grandees of European letters like George Steiner (he hits the true Steinerian note in such sentences as: "Leopardi is the last major European writer to be a direct interlocutor of Antiquity"). Even omitting the many French terms that can plausibly lay claim to a presence in educated English, we encounter tat gratuit, salonfähig, glacis, cabotage, guerres en chaîne, signum rememorativum, déphasage, en toutes lettres, chasses gardées, décombres, in nuce, fin de non recevoir, plumpes Denken and many more. No one could accuse Anderson of playing to the gallery. Instead, he moves with confidence among the choice spirits of European culture, past more than present, capable of seeming as distant as Petrarch or Spinoza from the streetwise Netheads who define contemporary popular styles.

Except, of course, when it comes to politics, and with Anderson it always does come to politics—or, rather, it always starts there. The primacy of the political in intellectual life is the unifying theme of these essays, and "politics is always a Kampfplatz," as he characteristically put it in his NLR editorial. The limply academic "site of struggle" would be a poor substitute for the German term here: Anderson has in mind a more direct clash between two opposing sides. The informing impulse of his analyses is to reveal how there always are only two sides. On this matter he speaks admiringly of the contention by the conservative German political philosopher and Nazi jurist Carl Schmitt that the defining feature of politics is the division between "friend" and "foe." This insistence lends a certain spatial simplicity to Anderson's charting of the intellectual field. On first inspection, various thinkers may appear to have multiple affiliations or to be otherwise hard to classify politically, but one of the most familiar cadences of Anderson's prose is the sound of digging beyond these surface distractions. For example, Ferdinand Mount may seem to be sympathetic to a number of radical constitutional reforms, "but the generous note struck on these pages must still find its place within the score as a whole." Similarly, Garton Ash's "sincerity" in criticizing the Western record in the Balkans may be "beyond question," but his promotion of the notion of "Central Europe" needs to be unmasked as "ideological," possessing "a hard policy edge." The center always turns out to be uninhabitable ground in Anderson's polarizing political topography; the "logic" (a favored term) of the underlying affiliations will always come out. Even iconic left-liberals like Habermas and Bobbio "ultimately" (another favored term) reveal their true colors. A highly critical account of the two philosophers' responses to "successive wars waged by the West" in the 1990s concludes: "The political complexion of such positions is clear enough." In these pieces Anderson acts as a zealous health-and-safety inspector for the left consumer, insisting that a range of interesting writing be labeled "Dangerous: May contain liberalism."

The other governing intellectual strategy of Anderson's writing is, these days, left more implicit: It might, unsympathetically, be termed "the tyranny of deep explanation." In parodies of old-style communist rhetoric, a place was always found for the phrase "It is no accident, comrade, that..." where the contention in question would assert a common causality linking two improbably distant developments. Anderson could no more be charged with crude economic determinism than with crude anything else. But a disposition to explain "consciousness" in terms of "social being" (to invoke Marx's canonical formula) lingers. As in so much contemporary work in the humanities and social sciences, especially of a self-described "radical" inclination, a particular cachet attaches to "explaining" ideas or aesthetic creations as the expression of some set of social circumstances assumed to be more fundamental. When this strategy is conjoined with a thoroughgoing insistence on the underlying topography of the Kampfplatz, one always risks hitting a paranoid note or seeming to understand history in terms of conspiracy theory writ large. One does not have to be committed to a know-nothing nominalism to find some of these proposed connections implausibly tight, just as one does not have to be a political innocent to find some of the alleged mechanisms implausibly sinister. Certainly, there are times in reading Anderson when history can seem like "no accident" waiting to happen.

This set of intellectual dispositions seems most likely to pay dividends when addressed to the work of figures who directly engaged in the ideological debate of their time, like Schmitt and Hayek. Less promising material is provided by figures who stuck closely to their own disciplinary protocols, like John Rawls. For the most part, Anderson provides a full and fair recension even of those theories he goes on to criticize, but I detect signs of impatience in his dealings with Rawls, perhaps akin to the impatience that characterized the younger Anderson's dismissive remarks about British philosophy of the 1950s and '60s. What he terms Rawls's "complete abstention" about commenting on current affairs is surely one source of this impatience; Anderson expects thinkers to act as public intellectuals, especially when their trade is political philosophy. But a knock-on effect of the tyranny of deep explanation may be at work, too. Thus, in his powerfully forensic recent piece on the responses of Rawls, Habermas and Bobbio to the international conflicts of the end of the twentieth century, Anderson looks to (a selective description of) early political experience to account for the character of their respective philosophical enterprises: "Service in America's war to regain the Pacific; a boyhood in Nazi Germany; underground resistance against Italian Fascism. It would be surprising if three such distinct experiences were without trace in the work of those who went through them." "It would be surprising" sets off uncomfortable echoes of "it is no accident." But would it be so surprising? It is not, after all and pace Anderson's second sentence, the distinctiveness of the three experiences that makes them likely to leave this kind of trace: It would have to be, rather, that in each case the formative power of the experience was strong enough and relevant enough to affect the later work. The experiences in question came early in these figures' respective lives, before any of them had embarked on their defining adult activity. Moreover, not only are the experiences different; the genres of subsequent work were different, too. One can readily see why, in Bobbio's case, his involvement in the partisan resistance to Fascism might stand in an illuminating relation to his writings on postwar Italian politics. But Rawls was doing philosophy, and both the Kantian and analytic traditions that shaped his work gave that enterprise something of a formal or autotelic character. Anderson's tactics with Rawls, who comes in for some rough handling in this book, may occasionally appear to deny this enterprise its own internal imperatives.

Hardly surprisingly, Anderson's gift for entering into and imaginatively possessing work on widely differing topics is most winningly displayed in his dealings with figures whose writing he admires. The essay here on Robert Brenner's attempt to track the impact of new forms of mercantile capital on English seventeenth-century politics is a prize example, tirelessly analytical without ever being reductive. Yet even in these essays, a certain hauteur or sharpness of reprimand occasionally obtrudes. At one point, he teasingly reproaches Eric Hobsbawm for a weakness for honors and similar emblems of acceptance by the British establishment, but then he adds, as though in partial exculpation of the great man's foible: "In Britain an inability to resist gewgaws is anyway as common among eminent scholars—historians of all stripes foremost among them—as once African agents of the slave trade." At first reading, I did not properly register the offensiveness of this comparison. Is he really saying that the acceptance of knighthoods or (in Hobsbawm's case) the Companion of Honour by contemporary scholars displays a weakness on a par with that of those African intermediaries who sold their compatriots into a life of slavery, suffering and early death? No, one protests, he is simply looking for a telling comparison in the matter of being unable to resist "gewgaws," and the gullibility of African slavers in this matter was once a truism. The allusion is scarcely hobbled by political correctness and may be the more vivid for that. Still, one wonders why Anderson's literary imagination proposed such a gratuitously slighting comparison.

The tonal lapse in this instance may, most charitably, be read as an expression of Anderson's own pride in a kind of outsiderdom, a prickly resistance to any kind of establishment incorporation (a position not impaired by the appointment at UCLA that he has held for some years). "Uncompromising realism" involves standing out against more than one kind of compromise. When in the same essay he cites the older historian's astringent comments on contemporary liberal democracy as indicating "how unassimilable Hobsbawm's work is to any comfortable consensus," he is bestowing his highest praise. When, by contrast, he comments, apropos Hobsbawm's tendency to find silver linings in his otherwise somber account of the triumph of global capitalism, that "a resistance that dispenses with consolations is always stronger than one which relies on them," he is pulling moral rank.

Anderson stands apart in another, more elusive way, too. Although he is without question immersed in the effort to understand the contemporary world—restlessly ranging from China to Peru, searching for causality, registering variety—there is a sense in which he does so in the manner of the great intellectual figures of the nineteenth century. He is essentially a private scholar, not a professional academic; he is at ease in several languages and, by contemporary standards, unimaginably well read in the whole European intellectual and literary tradition; he charts both the evolution of civilizations and the spasms of the zeitgeist with a mixture of command and intimacy; his majestic, long-paced essays would not have been out of place in La Revue des Deux Mondes or the Edinburgh Review in their prime; and whether in discerning the movement of mind in contemporary thought or the movement of capital in the world economy, he habitually operates with an intellectual ambition that is little short of Hegelian.

These qualities make him "untimely," in Nietzsche's sense, for all that his reading and engagement with the world is strenuously à la page (as he might put it). And this is another way in which matters of tone and style start to become revealing indices of self-positioning. At one point in his recollections of historian E.P. Thompson, his former comrade and antagonist, Anderson records that Thompson "chaffed me for impudence about Swift." The slight archaism is perfectly judged, hinting at the school prefect ticking off his fag; the idiom catches his sense of Thompson's seniority, a complicating ingredient in their famous (and famously fierce) exchanges several decades ago. Something similar recurs in his winning essay on the eccentric Italian philologist, political theorist and proofreader Sebastiano Timpanaro, where Anderson rounds out his portrait by saying: "As for questions of character, his categories retained an eighteenth-century ring: his most frequent term of dispraise was mascalzone—'scoundrel.'" One senses the appeal of such a vocabulary to Anderson. In his appreciation of Thompson, he recounts an anecdote in which the older scholar asked a mutual friend what Anderson was up to. The friend mentioned that the latter was writing a piece on conservative thinkers (reproduced as the first chapter of the present collection), to which Thompson retorted: "Yes, I know. Oakeshott was a scoundrel. Tell him to stiffen his tone."

For all his pessimism about the course of recent history, Anderson has retained his conviction that scoundrels should not be allowed to get away without a good thrashing. This too, he implies, should be a matter of honor on the left, and so, in keeping with this aristocratic code, a number of those who have given offense are "called out," challenged to a dialectical duel, theories at twenty paces. Anderson gives them both barrels; this collection resembles the reading room of a club, temporarily turned into a field hospital, the mortally wounded gasping in every armchair. Some of these unfortunates are fellow stylists, and there are occasional moments in Anderson's prose that suggest he may be tempted to shoot in the air, honor satisfied. But then some inner ancestral voice barks at him with military-gentry gruffness: "Stiffen yer tone, Anderson." And by God, sir, he has. ■

The Best Intentions

STUART KLAWANS

SYRIANA • THE BOYS OF BARAKA • PUNISHMENT PARK

I want America to watch a serious movie about guns and oil, spooks and money, geopolitics and fractured family life, in all their Tolstoyan interconnectedness. What I need, though, is for George Clooney to joke manfully about having the world's coolest toys. I want a thriller where the establishing shots ("Beirut. Hezbollah Headquarters") set up instructive scenes showing how the poor and dispossessed struggle in the Middle East, the wealthy enjoy their high life in Geneva, the powerful scheme for more power in Washington. What I need, though, is for Matt Damon to zoom through a crazy car chase, followed by sex with a startling woman. I want ambition and substance and contemporaneity and big ideas, and I want them released nationwide. What I need is for Jeffrey Wright to act everybody else off the screen.

I want—or am supposed to want—the big and very serious new movie with Clooney, Damon and Wright. But sometime during the second hour of watching CIA operative Clooney, bearded and plump, schlep around like Zero Mostel doing baggy-suit tragedy; sometime while seeing Damon behave no more colorfully than would his character, a market analyst, and witnessing Wright's unrelieved confinement in the role of a corporation attorney—the kind of guy who would iron his underpants, after starching them—my personal cravings fell into conflict with the good of the electorate. I wanted Three Kings, The Bourne Identity, Angels in America, no matter how much the American people might need Stephen Gaghan's Syriana.

Does an informed citizenry require this picture? Maybe. Television and radio do a poor job of analyzing the relationships among oil companies, lawyers, financiers, governments (at overt and covert levels) and the world's Muslim population (whether militant or just hanging on). In fact, television and radio generally welcome such analysis as they would a tax audit from a hepatitis carrier. They prefer such unpleasantness to be handled by The Nation, a publication that goes unread by 99.93 percent of Americans. So all honor to Gaghan, his producers and Warner Bros. for taking on the job. If Gaghan (best known for the screenplay of Steven Soderbergh's Traffic) has overreached, then he's failed the right way, through an excess of virtue. Syriana's flaws, presumably, would come from his faults as a first-time director.

Maybe. Inexperience might account for the stuttering rhythms of Syriana (new scenes keep breaking in before the old ones really get started), or the frequent use of images as mere accompaniments to dialogue, or the lapse of having Matt Damon and his movie wife, Amanda Peet, attend a funeral looking like the world's best-rested mourners. Nonlethal errors, you might say, even though they blow across the screen with the monotony of a sandstorm. The bigger problem—for which inexperience cannot be an excuse—lies with the script itself.

Gaghan has focused the screenplay on characters who work as midlevel functionaries: the aging covert operations guy who's too professional for his own good, the young market analyst who blunders his way into serving a Persian Gulf prince, the lawyer who's assigned to search for illegalities in a huge corporate merger. In the course of Syriana, all of these men get squeezed by people with more power and a greater stake in the game—a premise that helps to structure the film and has the added merit of being plausible. Yet the contrasting ways in which these characters respond to pressure turn out to be irrelevant. Their choices have large personal consequences—destroying an individual career here, advancing one there—but they cannot affect the great oiled machine that Gaghan has constructed as his cinematic world. It rolls over everyone without so much as a cough in the carburetor.

This is neither realism nor tragedy.

It's cynicism, which exposes itself most nakedly in Damon's addresses to the Arab characters, and in Gaghan's own portrayal of them.

Damon first. In speeches that pointedly dispense with all courtesy, his character castigates the Persian Gulf princes for arrogance, incompetence, addiction to luxury and indifference to work. Damon bellows these charges straight into the camera—and in the movies, energy doesn't lie. He's thrilling the crowd (a presumably non-Islamic audience) by telling off the Arab elite on their behalf. Although Gaghan, in a gesture toward fairness, has invented one good Arab prince (Alexander Siddig), whose principles are so wholesome that Sesame Street could teach them, I think he expects most viewers to recognize Damon's angry tune and to hum along with it.

When Gaghan turns from the elite to Islam's masses, he uses no mouthpiece. Instead, he directly sums up untold millions in the character of a Pakistani guest worker (Mazhar Munir), who follows a predictable route from the unemployment line to a terrorist-spawning Islamic school. Like the other characters, he is mere fuel for Gaghan's world-machine; but unlike them, he isn't given even the illusion of choice. His course is set from the moment he comes on screen—which makes nonsense of the pretty talk of democracy that you hear from Damon and his prince.

In this way, Syriana spreads before you a grand political vista, only to deny the possibility of political agency. In the film's terms, the sole effective sphere of action is the family—and, more specifically, the father-son relationship. This, too, is a structural element of the screenplay, which sets up contrasts among all the characters. But just as Syriana misses the fun of a good thriller, so too does it fall short as family drama.

Put it this way: At the end of War and Peace, Tolstoy filled the father's hand with a soaking diaper. In Syriana, unfortunately, we don't get that much juice.

"I'm strong—strong like Frederick Douglass," says 12-year-old Richard early in The Boys of Baraka. His boast, of course, is more wish than description. Like the other young subjects of this documentary (opening November 30 at New York's Film Forum), Richard came before the camera as a hard-pressed kid from Baltimore's crumbling, chaotic public schools. People said he was "at risk"—a phrase that, for one boy in the film, meant he'd been suspended eight times in the past year, and for another that he had a junkie mother and a mean streak. For Richard it meant that he was reading at second-grade level, and that his father was doing thirteen and a half years in prison.

The solution that was proposed and then recorded in fascinating, ultimately devastating, detail by filmmakers Heidi Ewing and Rachel Grady was for Richard to develop his hoped-for strength in the Kenya bush as a student at the privately run Baraka School. Each year, a Baltimore foundation recruited twenty boys for this program, which took them from a neighborhood that was "all about drugs" (as Richard said) and transported them to a place of natural beauty near a village where black people lived in dignity and peace. Some of the boys didn't like it at first: Schoolwork was demanding, discipline strict and television nonexistent. And though the families back home were fractured, the boys still missed them. By the end of the first year, though, these students had gained new mastery of themselves (as symbolized by a hike up Mount Kenya) and were looking forward to the next term, which was supposed to leave them ready for high school.

Up to this point, The Boys of Baraka keeps threatening to become a motivational film, or (worse still) a promotion piece for this private initiative. But Ewing and Grady are marathon-runner documentarians—the type who are committed to living with their subjects for months and years, and to discovering the film's content and shape along the way. Through perseverance and honesty, they recorded a terrible reversal in the expected story, then went on to show how the boys coped with it. Some did unexpectedly well; and some, for all their wishful boasting, did not. Either way, you ache for these kids, who'd already had enough disappointment for a lifetime.

In a tent set up in the baking sun, in a place beyond reach of the Constitution, a tribunal judges the supposed enemies of America, then hands them to the National Guard for cruel and unusual treatment. From this bare description, suitable for the TV Guide listing that the film will never have, you might suppose Punishment Park to be a picture about the present "war on terror." When I add that the lighting is harsh and the camera handheld, you might further imagine that the footage is documentary, snatched from today's awful reality.

You would be wrong on both counts. Newly released on DVD by New Yorker Films, Punishment Park is in fact a document of sorts, but from 1971. Its appearance of being raw reportage is an illusion, meticulously created by writer-director Peter Watkins.

In the depths of the Nixon era, Watkins set out to make a fiction film set in an America just slightly worse than reality. Defendants in political trials would be bound, gagged and dragged out of court, as was Bobby Seale in Chicago; young antiwar activists, or student bystanders, would be shot to death, as they were at Kent State and Jackson State; and the McCarran Act would be in force, giving the federal government the potential to suppress dissent with extraordinary power. The only exaggeration, in Watkins's fake documentary, was that the government would openly use this power. Those accused of sedition—a mixed crew of black nationalists and Black Panthers, draft resisters, New Left organizers, feminist songwriters, hippie poets and Chicano activists—would be removed from the court system, examined before a tribunal and then offered a choice of sentence: a long term in a federal penitentiary or three days' service in a training exercise for police and military forces. Of course, everyone would choose the latter sentence, not knowing that the delicately named Punishment Park was in fact an immense desert where convicts were hunted down in a game without rules.

You will not be surprised to learn that Punishment Park quickly vanished upon its initial release. Now that New Yorker Films has brought it back from oblivion, you might find it compelling for three reasons. The first is its absolute accuracy about the political divisions of the time—an effect Watkins achieved through the careful casting of nonprofessionals in all the roles, as dissidents, tribunal members and cops. The performers' improvised speeches (or should I say shouting matches?) reflected their actual beliefs. The second thing that's compelling about the film is Watkins's astounding mimicry of television news coverage and BBC special reports. Few people had used this strategy before him; none since have done it better.

The third reason for watching Punishment Park today? It's called Guantánamo, or Abu Ghraib, or names yet unknown to us. It took thirty-four years, but the near future of Watkins's movie has now become our present. ■

Ship's Mysterious Disappearance Changes American History

MISTAKE NETS FORTUNE IN SHIPWRECK SILVER

Captain Jerry Murphy didn't know fishing would land him a spot in history. One sweltering August evening in 1993, Murphy's fishing boat, The Mistake, landed its greatest catch. While trawling south of Louisiana, Murphy netted what he thought were rocks. Much to his amazement, these heavy "rocks" were actually pure silver Spanish Half Reales, among the FIRST legal tender silver coins from colonial times! Not only did Murphy "mistakenly" discover a fortune in silver shipwreck coins, he also stumbled upon the 200-year-old mystery of the lost El Cazador. As Murphy would soon find out, this was no ordinary ship and these were no ordinary coins!

DID CONSPIRACY SINK SHIP – AND SPAIN'S AMERICAN EMPIRE?

In 1783, over 200 years before Murphy's "mistake," Spain was mired in an economic crisis that threatened its control of Louisiana. In an effort to regain control of the vast territory, King Carlos III struck a fortune in silver coins at the Mexico City Mint and ordered his most powerful warship — El Cazador (The Hunter) — to carry the coins to New Orleans where they would be placed into circulation. The ship mysteriously vanished short of its destination leaving no survivors or clues to explain its disappearance. Financially crippled, Spain reluctantly sold Louisiana to France's Napoleon Bonaparte. Three years later Napoleon, in an effort to rescue his own struggling economy, sold the Louisiana Territory to the U.S at a bargain price.

Spain's mysterious loss was blamed on stormy waters. But was The Hunter hunted down — the result of stormy relations with its foes? No one will ever know.

AMERICA'S FIRST SILVER COINS RICH IN HISTORY AND DETAIL

Struck over 220 years ago at the historic Mexico City Mint — America's first Mint — these authentic Spanish Silver Half Reales never circulated! About the size of a dime, coins like these were trusted pocket change for people like Thomas Jefferson & George Washington and were legal tender in the U.S. until the Civil War! Only a fraction of the El Cazador's treasure has been recovered and each coin available in this offer has been individually hand-selected and professionally preserved. A signed Certificate of Authenticity and a deluxe collector's holder that details the El Cazador's last voyage and mysterious demise accompany each Spanish Silver Half Reale.

The must-have silver coin for history buffs, coin collectors and mystery lovers!

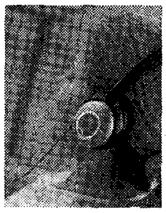
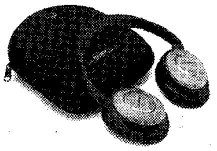
Now With Enhanced Audio Performance And Styling.

Think of them as a reprieve from the world around you. Whether it's the engine roar inside an airplane cabin, the bustle of the city or the distractions in the office, Bose QuietComfort® 2 headphones help them fade softly into the background with the flick of a switch. You can savor delicate musical nuances without disturbing others. And when you're not listening to music, you can slip into a tranquil haven – where you can relax and enjoy peace and solitude. Clearly, these are no ordinary headphones. It's no exaggeration to say they're one of those things you have to experience to believe.

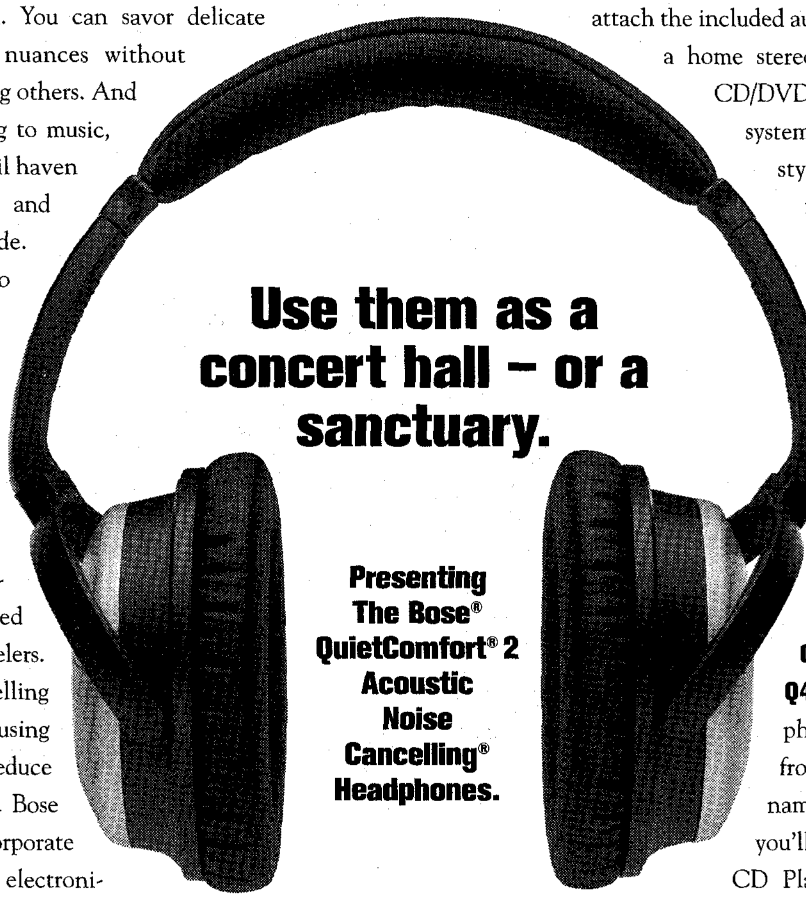
Reduce noise with Bose technology. Our headphones were designed primarily for airplane travelers. But owners soon started telling us how much they enjoy using them in other places to reduce distractions around them. Bose QC™ 2 headphones incorporate patented technology that electronically identifies and dramatically reduces noise, while faithfully preserving the music, movie dialogue or tranquility you desire. Technologyreview.com reports, "It's as if someone behind your back reached out, found the volume control of the world, and turned it way, way, down." Perfect for listening to music, whether you're on the go, at home or in the office.



Enhanced audio from our best sounding headphones ever. When QC2 headphones were first introduced, CNET said, "All sorts of music – classical, rock, and jazz – sounded refined and natural." Travel & Leisure Golf said, "Forget 'concertlike' comparisons; you'll think you're onstage with the band." With their enhanced audio performance, today's QC2 headphones are even better, delivering audio that's so crisp and clear you may find yourself discovering new subtleties in your music.



"The QuietComfort 2 lives up to its name...It's easy to forget they're on your head." That's what columnist Rich Warren says. To enjoy peace and tranquility, simply turn them on. To add Bose quality sound, attach the included audio cord and connect them to a home stereo, laptop computer, portable CD/DVD/MP3 player or in-flight audio system. They also offer improved styling and a fold-flat design for easy storage in the slim carrying case.



Use them as a concert hall – or a sanctuary.
